BEGINNINGS IN DESIGN...

THE HARP.

A Large Piece Loosely Trimmed.

This frame is lined and filled and covered like the one in our last study. The strings are bronzed before any of the flowers or green are put in. The cutting of the second string may be done at any time before or after the piece is finished by snipping with heavy nippers. After covering the frame with the usual green background, trail smilax from the right hand corner of the scroll which forms the top of the frame, around all the outside edge to the base, excepting the upright column which forms the right hand side of the harp. A new feature of this design is the heavy lining of the lower edge of the top. The material is white carnations. Why this is done on this particular part of the harp, rather than on any other, is that this is the thickest and most massive part of the piece. The background of the entire piece is of Lord Beaconsfield pansies. Stem these singly on half picks, observing the same general directions for stemming as have been given for roses. Set the pick about half an inch below the flower. You will find it convenient to have some fine wire cut in about 4-inch lengths for stemming flowers of this size. Fill the right standard of the piece solid with the pansies on three sides of the frame, front and two edges. Extend this background down well onto the base to make a higher effect and thus lend a stately air to the piece. Cover the front and inside edge of the opposite side of the piece and the front of the top with the same background of pansies. This finished, you have so far a harp of blue pansies with a lining of white under the top. This is the harp proper. The base should have only the plain green background.

The Trimming.

According to the principle for cutting and stemming roses discussed previously, prepare Bride roses for the top cluster, the left side and the base. Select the larger and more fully blown for the thick part of the scroll which forms the top of the harp. Set them in rather closely, allowing two or three to straggle downward over the pansy background of the right standard. Just where this cluster is, is the heaviest part of the piece, except the base. Develop this proportion by bulking the cluster right at this point, and gradually thinning the spray as it turns upward to the left and then falls to the slender part toward the left end of the top, where the frame is narrow enough to admit of but a single line of buds. Considerable care will be needed at the thick part of the cluster to turn the roses both ways.

Leaving a perceptible interval between the tip of the top cluster and the start of the cluster which trims the left side, follow the proportion and direction of the left side of the frame with a cluster to suit. This second cluster droops, but does not cover the entire background of the left side. It ends rather more abruptly at the bottom than the top cluster, and is not so marked in its character. The upper tip of this cluster was composed of cape jasmine. A third cluster takes its source at the base and completes the rose trimming of the piece. The lower portion of it is set in rather closely on the base, and about a half dozen of long, unequal length stems train up toward the cluster on the left side above, while the longest and most graceful rose of all is pinned against the inside of the right standard and falls loosely in between the strings. To either side of the base are attached two or three drooping roses falling according to their own sweet will.

The Harp.

The Base.

To balance the heavy appearance of the slanting standard, start a group of lines to the right of the base, springing from it. Long stemmed cyperus leaves and clusters of marguerites with foliage and buds serve this purpose well. Stem the cyperus leaves singly on whole picks inside the lower ends of the stems, and the marguerites in groups of from three to five or six on a pick. Select various length stems for each group. Scatter them from the extreme right of the base through among the roses and the strings of the harp. Where there is as good a support as the harp string, seize the opportunity to wire them to the support somewhere behind a leaf where the tie cannot show. Intensify the color effect by planting a group of the daisies against the lower end of the pansy standard. Do not be over-anxious to display a full front view of every flower, but let one here and there be modestly disappearing. Insert from the rear of the base two or three more long cyperus leaves, so that they will appear in perspective behind the strings. This will add depth and distance effect so often lacking in floral designs.

If any difficulty occurs in holding such trimming as the cyperus leaves and the marguerites in place, guy them to the frame with a single strand of No. 36 wire. A few feet away this can never be seen.

Have the harp strings as fine as possible. This is the reason the bronzed wire is to be preferred to strands of green.

An Important Requirement.

One of the most important requirements of a good floral design is a uniform background which conforms strictly to the outline of the piece. One of the most pertinent criticisms that is made on a loosely arranged design is that the form of the piece is not distinctly preserved. But it is possible to construct a well-defined piece and still work in plenty of art. Construct first, trim last. In the harp herewith presented the rose clusters seem to cling to rather than form the piece, and that is their sole mission here.

Other color combinations for this same piece might be something like the following: Perle roses and bronze pansies shaded into dark brown, dark at the base and lighter on the top. Marguerites would be just as appropriate, and even more so with the yellow and brown; Bridesmaid or La France roses with dark purple pansies; silvered strings with violet and white. Gertrude Blair.

NEW DAHLIAS.

Among the notable novelties of the year 1904 are the set of dahlias of H. Hornsveld, of Baarn, Holland, which were awarded a first-class certificate of merit by the Dutch Horticultural Society. These very large-flowering single or semi-double varieties have extra long stems and are therefore a valuable acquisition for those who grow dahlias for cut flower work. The four varieties which were certificated are:

Queen Wilhelmina, pure white, very large flowers, borne on extra long stems, far above the foliage; Duke Henry, of a soft red color, on stems like the preceding; G. Baron de Grancy, cream white, half double flower of excellent form, the inner petals bent a little inward; Glory of Baarn, soft rose with pink reverse, a magnificent variety and very free flowering.

These varieties will be exhibited at the Dusseldorf international exhibition this summer and will afterward be distributed to the trade by H. Copijn & Son, of Groenekan, Utrecht, Holland.

CARRIED-OVER STOCK.

We have some fine Bridesmaid and Bride roses at the present time, grown in our greenhouses the second year. We gave the roses a rest of four weeks, cutting them back to about one foot and started in earnest, and forced them out the first week in June. The eyes broke out nicely, about one-third of them having a thin, yellow look. We removed the old soil, but not deep enough to disturb the roses in the least, and filled same up again with good fresh soil. Kindly advise what you think of the situation? Do you think they will turn out better next month, or would you suggest putting them out and replanting them? Kindly advise the best and most profitable way to do. C. E. S.

This method of culture, as I have often pointed out, requires a greater amount of skill, attention and labor than young stock requires and, unless carried out by an expert, the results are seldom satisfactory. Some few experts who have adopted this method have had wonderfully good results, but the majority of growers are content as yet to experiment along these lines on a very limited scale.

These roses were apparently treated all right up to a certain point, where they were forced out the first week of June. By reducing the stock to a semi-dormant condition, forcing, which should never under any conditions be applied to a rose, was where the mistake was made.

After the first good watering was given, water should have been applied very sparingly; in fact, little more than a syringing twice a day during bright weather being necessary until root action was again well established, a fact which would be indicated by the appearance of well developed leaves of a good texture and color and young wood of a firm and stocky character. Then watering could be gradually resumed and full ventilation be given.

The indications are that they have been subjected to too high temperature and have been given too much water before they were in a fit state to use it. It is possible that with judicious care in watering and ventilating they may do better next month, but where root action has been destroyed as has evidently been the case and as the season is well along the prospects for success would be greater if the house were replanted with young healthy stock.

PLANTING BEAUTY.

In my notes in the Review of June 16, when advising the early or rather June planting of Beauties, I had before me copies of the records of Beauty crops for some years back. These records were taken from houses planted as early as April and as late as the end of July and at intermediate dates and the balance has in all cases been in favor of June planted stock. Keeping in touch with some of the largest and best Beauty growers in the country, and occasionally feeling their pulse, I have found that this is the prevailing idea and one which is largely acted upon.

In the Review of June 23 "Phil" points out that by keeping to this method we are apt to get into a rut, a fact which I cheerfully admit, but when this same rut leads to success we do not need to care how deep it is. He instances one of our best and largest growers as having left that rut and successfully made one for himself. No doubt there are a great many things to be learned in Beauty growing and, personally, I am glad to hear of any new departure which has proved a success, only this with me, as with many others, is no new departure.

Granted that during the spring months this late planted stock produces large crops of most excellent quality, by the time the plants are ready to do this they are handicapped so far in number of blooms cut, when compared with the earlier planted stock which has been doing yeoman's duty during November, December and January, when prices also are at the best, that, all else being equal, they cannot, as my records prove, produce nearly so many dollars by the end of the season. Moreover, if the earlier planted stock be handled as skillfully as their younger congeners they are capable of producing as good crops during the early summer months.

One of our principal reasons for June planting is that the young stock, in the freer possibilities of the bench, are less liable to receive a check than if allowed to remain in the pots during the hot days of June.

As "Phil" correctly surmises, my experience of late years has been in the middle west, where we were accustomed to excessive heat during June (these conditions are materially altered during the past three years) and consequently my notes would naturally be more likely to suit conditions there, but as I have now joined the ranks of eastern growers my opinions are liable to considerable modifications, and as my stock will this year be all of late July planting I will have ample opportunity to test this theory. Having no early planted stock with which to make comparison, I will still have to rely on past experience, which proves that in all but a few cases the June planted stock is the most reliable and as compared with stock planted in July the most remunerative.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The Newport Horticultural Society held a very successful rose show on June 21 and 22. The display of roses to fill a space of six feet by three feet was an excellent one. The first prize, a silver cup, went to E. T. Gerry, Arthur Griffin, gardener, for a very artistically arranged stand, his Mme. Gabriel Luizet being very fine. There were five other entries in this class. Mr. Griffin secured a silver medal for a table of nicely flowered plants of the new everblooming rambler, Mme. Norbert Levavasseur. He also received a number of other prizes in the classes for table centerpieces and foliage plants.

Most of the rose classes were well contested. Gardenias, which are prime favorites in Newport, were also well shown. First prize for the best corsage bouquet from assistant gardeners went to one containing gardenias. Vegetables were well shown and some good fruit was staged. In Mr. Griffin's winning collection of strawberries, the English varieties, Laxton's Noble and Royal Sovereign, were extra good. John Ash, gardener to Miss E. J. Clark, Pomfret Centre, Conn., received a silver medal for a collection of fruit which included Diamond Jubilee, Foster's Seedling, and Black Hawtro grapes and peaches. Diamond Jubilee grape received a certificate of merit.

In the way of miscellaneous exhibits, F. R. Pierson Co. was awarded a silver medal for their new dense sport of Nephrolepis Piersoni. John Scott re-received a certificate of merit for Nephrolepis Scottii. M. H. Walsh showed some of his new seedling rambler roses, which included Carissima and Wedding Bells. These received a silver medal. Mildred Grant was also shown by him and received a certificate of merit. D. McIntosh had a table of nice seedling dracaenas which were favored with a bronze medal. Blue Hill Nurseries had a fine lot of hardy perennials, and Lager & Hurrell a very pretty table of orchids. Geo. Melvin received honorable mention for a plant of Brassia verrucosa. Certificates of merit were also awarded a specimen plant of Dracæna Godseffiana and to a seedling dracæna in foliage intermediate between indivisa and congesta. The judges were M. H. Walsh, F. C. Green and W. N. Craig. C.

RENEWING THE BENCH SOIL.

Popular Belief in Necessity.

The article under this heading in the REVIEW for June 9, by your able correspondent, Mr. William Scott, has been read with much interest. The question was sent to the REVIEW some time ago, and the thorough consideration which Mr. Scott has given to the question makes the answer of considerably more value.

The question why greenhouse men change their soil for certain crops each year would seem at first a very simple one, but the characteristic answers one is likely to receive in reply to such a question would indicate, as Mr. Scott has pointed out, that most of the florists do not know, or at least have not a very clear conception, why they do this.

As to the matter of using the soil a second season for certain crops, the practice of the best growers is undoubtedly correct, since experience has shown too often that failure results. This fact alone would be a sufficient reason for not using it two years in succession, at least so long as such results follow. All greenhouse soils, however, are not renewed each year. For example, lettuce soils are better the longer they are used and cucumbers and other crops thrive well in old soil. There are in use in Massachusetts to-day some soils which have been utilized for lettuce for twenty-five consecutive years without changing, although such soil may occasionally be used for a crop of cucumbers, radishes, etc.

Reasons for Renewing Soils.

Mr. Scott has enumerated three principal reasons why the same soil is not used the second year. They are reasons which I think would be invariably accepted by good, intelligent growers. These reasons, condensed, are as follows:

First, the crop has taken the essential elements from the soil which they need.

Second, fibre has been utilized and destroyed and mechanical conditions modified.

Third, fungus and insect pests have been increased.

These three reasons are stated more extensively and explicitly by Mr. Scott, but for our purpose we condense the same. In regard to the last two reasons we are in full accord with the writer and it is only the first one that we wish to discuss. Before discussing the matter, however, we will briefly touch upon a few points relating to our experience.

An Experience With Roses.

We have grown American Beauty roses in the same soil for two years and we met with the customary trouble before we had got very far along with the second crop. Our crop was an experimental one, in which we were testing the influence of soil texture on the development of roses, and we did not wish to go to the expense of changing the soil. We were, of course, well aware that we were violating the rules and going contrary to the results of the experience and practice of the best experts, but, since we do not market our plants, failure to grow the crop did not embarrass us. Before, however, we had gone very far with the second year crop about two-thirds of the plants became sickly and many died. Careful examination of the plants showed no fungus or insect enemies at work; neither were there any eel worms. The trouble was one which affected the roots and since no organisms were found we looked elsewhere for the causes of the trouble.

The soil represented variations in texture, and they were taken from different places and mixed with sod and cow manure, according to prescribed formulas. One bench, however, did not have any sod added to it. The second year crop was set in this same soil in August, 1903, the only changes in the beds being the addition of some cow manure very carefully incorporated. No sod was added to the soil at the time of setting the second crop. During the first year, liquid manure was applied as usual but only a limited amount was used during the early period of the second crop. Some soil was taken six feet below the surface of the ground, others were surface soils and others had been used for cucumber crops, etc. It will be seen that the soils were a variable lot and had been used for different purposes, yet as far as the dying of the plants was concerned there was comparatively no difference which could be attributed to the behavior of the soils.

The Cause and Remedy.

The question naturally arises, what caused the plants to become abnormal and die? Chemical tests of every bed showed such a preponderance of abnormal constituents that it was a wonder that plants could thrive in such soil. The acidity of the soil was in every case high and the amount of sulphates, chlorides, ammonia and nitrates were excessive. Our soil was not treated differently from that of the best growers, except, perhaps, that the plants were not fed so highly as some growers feed them.

In order to apply a remedy for this trouble, all the beds were completely flooded with water and the roses were cut back, with the result that all made a quick recovery and no further loss of plants was experienced. The flooding of the beds lasted from one hour to one and a half hours each. A number of samples of percolated water were gathered and tested. We found by this practice that the acidity was greatly reduced and the excess of sulphates, chlorides, nitrates, etc., was washed out.

Soils Not Exhausted.

These results show that where crops are highly fed the soil becomes filled with various detrimental constituents and causes certain plants to become sickly and die when grown in such soil. Probably in no instance does the rose plant exhaust the soil of any of the essential elements, for greenhouse soils usually contain a large amount of available material at the start and, moreover, they are well supplied with additional food. Lettuce soils seldom appear to get into this condition, although they are liberally supplied with horse manure, containing straw, etc., every year. Occasional troubles are experienced with lettuce and cucumber soil where attempts have been made to apply other kinds of manure and fertilizers.

The writer has started a third crop of roses in the same soil as described, the same having been washed out thoroughly before planting. With the application of sod to increase the fibre there appears to be no reason why roses will not do something in such a soil, but whether this practice would be desirable for commercial growers remains to be seen, or at any rate it remains to be seen whether by washing soils and applying organic matter in the form of decomposed sod we can put them in as good condition as they were at first.

If washing out soils and supplying them with fibre would give as good results as those obtained from newly prepared soil, it would be advantageous in many cases to follow this practice. The rose plant has a limited root development and cannot be considered a heavy feeder. One of the principal reasons why soil has to be changed for such crops is because heavy feeding renders the soil constipated, as it were, and it needs a laxative or a purgative to rectify it. Outdoor roses will stand heavy feeding because there is a better chance of the fertilizer constituents becoming washed out.

CULTURAL NOTES.

Early planted stock is now growing apace and the question of supports must be looked into. Many commercial growers use a cheap string, two-ply jute generally, strung on two wires running parallel with the rows of plants, one wire well overhead and one on the ground. I never cared for this system personally, owing to the practical impossibility of getting the string tight enough to pull the shoots of the plant up close when they showed a disposition to crook in the stem. I prefer wire stakes, supported by stretching one wire for each row of plants to which the stakes are tied. Use some judgment in your staking, putting short stakes on the dwarf kinds (stakes two feet long are high enough for Cheltoni or Donald McLeod) and five or six feet stakes on the Eatons and others of that ilk.

Now that the benches are getting filled with roots considerable water is needed. Soak the soil thoroughly and then do not water again until the plants really need it. This habit of giving a light watering every day is utterly wrong, because while water has got to be applied at certain times to keep the soil moist, the roots of a chrysanthemum work best in a soil that is neither wet nor dry. The delicate feeding roots will all rot when the soil is being perpetually drenched. This condition will be found in pot plants when they become water-logged and is manifested in the benches by the plants making long, soft growth and pale foliage. When a plant is doing well the foliage is dark green and rich-looking.

On bright days, when the temperature runs high, spray the house over three of four times to cool things off a little. We are growing our plants under somewhat unnatural conditions under glass and the mum is not a stove plant by any means. Keep the house as cool as possible. About once a week put a nozzle on the hose that will throw a spray of water upwards and with this give the plants a thorough syringing on the under side of the leaves. It is not on the top of the foliage where the insects find a congenial home, but underneath where the water from the hose, as ordinarily applied, never reaches. I have many, many times found red spider working on the leaves when a casual inspection indicated that the plants were pictures of health.

If any of your plants are showing any tendency to leaf disease try using potassium sulphide, one ounce to two gallons of water. I have great faith in this preparation myself. It will kill mildew or rust and I believe will hold down leaf spot, if the cause, which is generally excessive watering, is removed.

Mildred Ware is showing some tendency to leaf spot, but it is such a grand thing that it will pay to go to a little trouble with it. Keep it pretty well on the dry side, so as to encourage as much as possible the formation of roots. When a plant has a good root system it will generally take care of the top without any trouble.

The preliminary schedule for the seventy-third annual fair of the American Institute of New York has been issued. The dates are November 10 to 17, and liberal premiums are offered for cut chrysanthemums, chrysanthemum plants, miscellaneous plants, roses and carnations, also fruits and vegetables. Those who have not received copies of the schedule may obtain them by addressing Dr. Robert Taylor, manager, care of Herald Square Exhibition Hall, New York City.

CULTURAL NOTES.

Now that you have your young plants growing nicely and all the weeds killed out, you will be asking yourself whether you should plant early in July or late in August. Those who grow both roses and carnations will likely be busy with rose planting until late in this month and to suggest planting carnations before they have finished planting the roses would only cause them to shake their heads, and rightly so, but hurry up and finish with your rose planting so your carnations will not also have to be late in coming in.

That it pays to plant carnations early cannot be denied. The best growers all over the country are planting their houses between July 10 and August 20. I would not say that you can make more money or cut finer blooms from plants benched July 10 than you can from plants housed the first week in August, but you certainly can cut more and better blooms from plants housed before August 20 than you can from those housed later.

Azalea Kokinshiba.

Azalea Ovinkin.

Two of the Japanese Azaleas so popular in the New York market the past season.

Of course varieties differ somewhat, but with the general run of varieties you will find that this will hold good.

The number of plants you have to house will, of course, have some bearing on the time you commence to plant. If you have only one house to plant you will not need to begin so early, as two men can throw out the plants, refill a house 10x100 and replant it all in ten days or less. In such a case I would begin about July 15 to 20, so as to have it replanted by August 1. If you have several houses to plant I would advise making a start just as early as possible. You cannot plant too early, but you will find the days slipping past rapidly a little later on, when you are in the thick of the work, and unless you get an early start you may find yourself planting carnations well into September. I think that most growers will agree with me when I say that you can figure off at least one per cent of the earnings of your plants for every day you let slip by after August 20 before planting them.

Much will, of course, depend on the weather you will have up to the first of the year, but a plant benched in September certainly cannot be in good shape to thrive during a dark November and December and it will be in still poorer shape to pull through a cold January, with constant fire heat and little ventilation. No good blooms could be expected from a plant under such conditions. A plant which was planted early in the summer will be well established and growing sturdily along through the fall and when a dark spell comes they will not suffer so quickly because the roots are in better working order. Oftentimes you will see a bed doing poorly all winter, but when spring comes the plants pick up and produce a big crop of fine blooms in April and May. While the grower is cutting the fine blooms he forgets what he lost on them all winter. A big crop of ever so fine blooms in April and May can never make up for a poor cut during the winter months. You should have a fair cut from them all winter and the big spring crop too, then you can make some money.

Some of the larger growers can afford to grow a bench or a house of a variety like Crocker, which will not give a large cut during mid-winter but will almost if not quite make up the deficit by holding up into the hot weather later than most varieties. The average grower does not want much to do with such varieties, however, as he can buy plenty of carnations during late spring at low figures. When he can sell his blooms for $1 per dozen is when he wants to be cutting the heaviest and he cannot do that from September planted stock.

The market these days requires so little stock and most of your beds will be bringing you such small returns that it will pay you well to throw out the plants and refill the beds. If you do not care to bring in the plants until after August 1st it will pay you to empty and refill as many beds as you can before you begin planting. It will not hurt the soil to lay on the beds and dry out perfectly dry for a few weeks. By wetting it about a week before planting it will resume its natural condition. I would not wet it one day and plant the next after it had lain dry several weeks. When refilling be sure you clean the house up well. Take out all the rubbish and weeds which may be growing along the paths or under the benches if your beds are raised above the ground. Old, decaying wood will harbor wood-lice which will give you much trouble later on. Painting should also be done now if possible, although of course it can be done later on if great care is exercised.

JAPANESE AZALEAS.

The accompanying illustrations are from photographs of two plants of Japanese azaleas flowered by Julius Roehrs, Rutherford, N. J. These Japs were very popular this spring in the better class of New York retail stores. Azalea Kokinshiba is a small-flowered single variety, the color reddish pink. The plant is about four feet high and well developed specimens are four to six feet in diameter. Azalea Ovinkin is white, double fringed. The plants in tubs make four to eight feet in height and three to six feet in diameter.

THE CUT FLOWER TRADE.

The cut flower season is supposed to close with the schools at the end of June, although the summer business makes many growers an excellent profit, and it is worth while to look back at this time to see the year in the perspective. It is undeniable that, on the whole, the season of 1903-4 was not equal to its predecessors in profit to the cut flower growers. The high cost of heating was enough to make an appreciable difference in results, other conditions being equal, but, unfortunately, they were not. Prices were not up to last year. The difference was most pronounced in the east, but it held good in Chicago, St. Louis and all principal markets. A general depression in business seemed to affect our trade all through the season, save at Christmas, Easter and Memorial day, when new records for sales were established in many places. Conditions were slowest in the fall and winter, business seeming to approach normal toward spring, but production, which had been below the usual cuts all winter, then so prodigiously increased that, with a marked deterioration in quality, average prices have been the lowest on record for May and June.

The season started out poorly with the chrysanthemums; trade was slow, qualities were not high and warm weather served to bring in a large part of the cut all at once. The production of violets was enormous and prices low all season, with fair business at Christmas and better at Easter, on Marie Louise and singles, most markets refusing Campbell altogether. Lilies made fair prices at Easter but many thousands were late and have sold very low. Bulbous stock made a meagre margin, if any, for the growers. While prices on roses have almost everywhere been less than last season, still good stock has commanded a ready market and those careful growers who have had successful crops of the better grade have had a fairly profitable season. With many growers teas have paid better than Beauties. Carnation prices have been under last year's, except for a few brief periods, but the carnation growers are making less complaint than anyone, good evidence that they have had a reasonably profitable season. There are, however, many growers who were attracted to carnations by the good results the last couple of years, who are going back to lettuce and cucumbers next season.

A MICHIGAN ESTABLISHMENT.

The acompanying illustrations give an idea of the character of the establishment of S. J. Long, at Petoskey, Mich., The view showing the grounds gives evidence that the proprietor believes in keeping his place neat and clean, an example to the community which every florist should set. Since the photograph was taken increasing business has necessitated an addition to the glass, the old houses having been extended and two new ones added at the left. The other picture shows Adlumia cirrhosa growing at Mr. Long's door. This is a graceful climber, very useful for covering. It is a hardy biennial, but might almost be classed with the perennials, as it resows itself year after year. The foliage is feathery, the maidenhair fern of the climbers. The tube-shaped flowers are light pink in color and borne in great profusion. The plant bears the common names of lace vine, Allegheny vine, mountain fringe and climbing fumatory. It should be mentioned that Mrs. Long's work has been of material importance in building up the business.

Adlumia Cirrhosa on a Michigan Florists' Porch.

ROCHELLE, ILL.—August Caspers has been in the business here for twenty-five years. He has a farm of twenty-eight acres which, when he began, was barren ground. It is now all within the corporate limits of the city. Mr. Caspers has built up a nice business, both in cut flowers, plants and vegetables under glass, also small fruits and outdoor vegetables.

Vegetable Forcing.

GREENHOUSE cucumbers at New York are 25 to 35 cents a dozen, with receipts from the south many thousands of packages each day.

TOLEDO, O.—Miller Bros. are building eight houses for lettuce and cucumbers. The roof material, etc., came from Chicago, the houses being of the Dietsch short-span pattern, fourteen feet nine inches wide, without partition walls, and 260 feet long.

A FUNGUS, called by scientists Dendryphium comosum, this season assumed the proportions of an epidemic in some of the cucumber establishments near London, England. This fungus is common on decaying vegetable matter but had never been recorded as parasitic. It came from straw in the stable manure used in the compost.

THE SQUASH BORER.

Enclosed you will find two insects found here in great numbers on the cucumber vines, known here as borers. As soon as these insects make their appearance the vines, or parts of them, die off suddenly in one day, while other branches on the same plant may stay green and healthy. They seem to hatch in the plant. In pulling up the dead plants in summer we find millions of them, that is, young ones. I am speaking of cucumbers grown in hotbeds. Any information that you may give on the subject will be highly appreciated. G. H. B.

The insects sent are what is commonly called the squash borer, as they are generally more prevalent on the squash than the cucumber plants. Though they prefer the squash, they are also quite at home on the cucumber and in some sections are quite troublesome. The mature insect lays its eggs usually near the base of the vines and when the larvæ hatch out they bore into the crowns or vines, causing them to die off suddenly as described. When the mature insects begin to make their appearance, if not too numerous, they can be kept down by handpicking. They are easily seen, as they usually harbor on the upper side of the leaves. Toward evening they are less active and are easily caught. Dusting with slug shot or other similar insecticide will help to keep them in check, as they usually feed before depositing their eggs. It is well to begin with the dusting of the plants at an early stage of their growth, so as to be ready for the insects when they come.

BUILDING AND PIPING.

We desire to build a greenhouse and wish to ask through the REVIEW how to do so. Our lot is 75x150 feet in size, the front west. The land inclines to the west so that the back end of the lot is three feet higher than the front; the alley is two feet higher than the back of the lot. We wish to build for a general stock of greenhouse and bedding plants, also ferns; would also like to grow carnations and grow roses to flower in pots. We have some chrysanthemums growing and have thought of starting with some cucumbers this fall. We have had a small greenhouse in connection with the store for several years but we want more room and desire to build to the best possible advantage. We would like to know whether to build on the top of the ground or to dig down to the level of the street in front, and what kind of span to build. We would like to build 40x150 feet, with boiler room separate, and an iron frame. Please give information how to heat, hot water or steam. Also please advise as to ventilators, size of glass, depth of soil for carnations and cucumbers, and how early cucumbers should be started. What kind of foundation should be used; how heavy should the wall be made with cement or mortar? We wish to construct the boiler room so that it will be fireproof. What kind of boiler? Should we set the boiler on top of the ground or dig a pit for it? C. E. H.

In constructing your greenhouse I would not advise you to dig down to the level of the street in front, but would build the wall 18 inches above the level of the street and excavate about the same depth at the higher end. A three-quarter span would be the best for roses and carnations, as this gives a more even amount of light to all the benches. For general stock, such as you mention, it would not be so important to have the greatest possible amount of light, but this style of a house would be as suitable as any for such a purpose.

Hot water would be best in your case, as it does not require such close attention as steam, the latter requiring the services of a night attendant. I would have top ventilators on both sides of the house, as in this way the house can be kept cooler during very warm weather, and during catchy weather it gives a chance to air on the sheltered side of the house. The size of glass I prefer is 18x24 inches.

Six inches of soil is quite enough for carnations, but for cucumbers I would prefer to have the benches eight inches deep. I prefer to plant the cucumbers in hills, adding soil as the roots appear on the outside. For first crop, cucumbers can be started the end of August.

For an iron frame construction, the best foundation would be brick laid up in cement, and wide enough to accommodate a 10-inch iron sill, the foundation being deep enough to make it good and solid. To make the boiler room fireproof, it would have to be constructed with brick and cement, with iron rafters, and corrugated iron roof.

Regarding the kind of boiler, I do not care to recommend any special make. There are many reliable boilers on the market, several of them advertised in the REVIEW. To give sufficient fall to insure good circulation, a pit should be dug for the boiler room, as your boiler will stand about eighteen inches above the floor when space is given for ash pit, and the top of your boiler should be at least five feet from the floor level. This would not give any too much fall.

To give suitable temperatures for the different subjects you intend to grow you would have to make at least three divisions in the house. For roses, a minimum temperature of 60 degrees would be required; for carnations and general bedding stock a minimum temperature of at least 50 degrees is necessary; whereas for cucumbers sufficient command of heat should be supplied to insure the temperature not to run under 65 degrees in any sort of weather. Regarding the piping. For the warmer house, considering that it is forty feet in width, about thirty lines of 2½-inch piping would be necessary to obtain the proper temperature. These would be best arranged in coils of six, making three flows and three returns in each coil. This warmest section I would have nearest the boiler, and to insure a temperature of 60 degrees in the second section about the same amount of piping will probably be required. For the cooler section four coils of the same number of pipes might be sufficient. Connections to the boiler should be made with not less than 5-inch pipes.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There is a fair amount of business doing for July. Even on the glorious Fourth, considered above all others as the florists' holiday, there was some demand. It might be more aptly termed "search," as the local growers do not cater to or stimulate summer business. Some of them have tried it and say it does not pay, so beyond Kaiserins, valley, sweet peas, a few carnations and some miscellaneous flowers, the market is rather bare of fine stock. Of course there are some nice Beauties, Liberties, Prosperities, cattleyas, etc., but when a good order comes along the dealers get desperate and draw on outside points for their supplies. I believe in Philadelphia enterprise sufficiently to predict that this state of affairs will not last long and that in a year or two at the farthest our growers will give us a few fine flowers of the best varieties in July and August, so produced as to earn shekels and incidentally relieve the spring and fall overproduction.

A Point of Interest.

At the last meeting of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society several members strongly advocated the use of hybrid tea in preference to other hybrid roses for outdoor planting in this section of the country. While there is plenty of room for all classes, there is no question that the hybrid teas have a great future before them and the sooner our growers realize this and intelligently meet the growing demand the better it will be for them.

Rural Doings.

Martin Richardson caught a fellow the other morning in his carnation patch, picking the Hills and Joosts. Martin was pretty mad and started with his prisoner for Justice Sibel's. On the way the fellow explained that he was a fakir and a gentleman, that he needed the flowers early and didn't like to disturb Martin and that he would have sent a check next morning with only ten per cent off for commission and no charge for picking. Martin decided to let his prisoner go with the flowers. The fellow has not been heard of since.

Thomas Flynn gave his boy a nice chick-weedy bed of mignonette to clean. The boy mistook the wishes of Thomas and got every mignonette out in nice little piles. His name is Willie Robinson. He is a bright, intelligent boy and should certainly be given a trial by some kind-hearted grower.

George Howard was hoeing in the carnation patch. Frank White left the water bucket to join him. "George," he sez, "I can sneeze whenever I want to." "Let's hear ye," sez George. "I don't want to," sez Frank. George kept on hoeing.

George Pyle was taking a sweet pea order around to a neighbor's when he saw a little boy eyeing a cherry tart in a baker's window. George is a kind-hearted boy and felt in his pockets for a penny. "You want that cookie, bub?" he asked. "I could eat six o' them bloody little tarts," came the answer. The penny slipped back in George's pocket.

Sam Kennedy left the hot greenhouses and had a glorious time on the Fourth. He described it this way: "I went to the house and put on me collar. Mary must ha guessed, but she never said nothin'. I went to the tavern at the corner and didn't touch a thing—I looked at the clock and sez to Bill Jones, 'If I ain't back you'll know I'm away!' An' he sez, 'All right, Sam.' Bill's a brick. I jumped on a car and went to the park. It was pretty late when I got back and Mary began to ask questions, and I sez, 'Mary, don't, I'm too sleepy,' an' she stopped. In the morning she started again an' I sez, 'Mary, don't; I'm too sick.' An' she stopped."

Fred Raymond is fond of a good show with plenty of soldiers and shooting in it. Fred had just left a bunch of roses at the box office for the leading lady when he met the program boy. "Is it a melodrama?" Fred asked. "Naw, nothin' mellow about it," sez the boy, "it's rotten."

Bobby Boyd was potting geraniums when the foreman came along. Bobby is proud of his potting and put on a few extra lugs. "They ain't dead yet," the foreman growled, "don't bury 'em."

Various Notes.

Griffin Bros., of Frankford, have the sympathy of their friends in the loss of their father.

Alfred Burton has the greenhouses purchased by his father in May planted in Beauties, Brides and Maids.

M. Rice & Co. received ninety cases by one steamer last Saturday, a very large importation to arrive at once.

J. A. Smith, with the H. F. Michell Co., has just returned from his vacation.

Edward Fancourt, with S. S. Pennock, seems pleased with the continued development of the ribbon department of the business.

The Florists' Club's meeting last Tuesday was largely devoted to matters pertaining to the St. Louis convention in August. A good-sized delegation is promised.

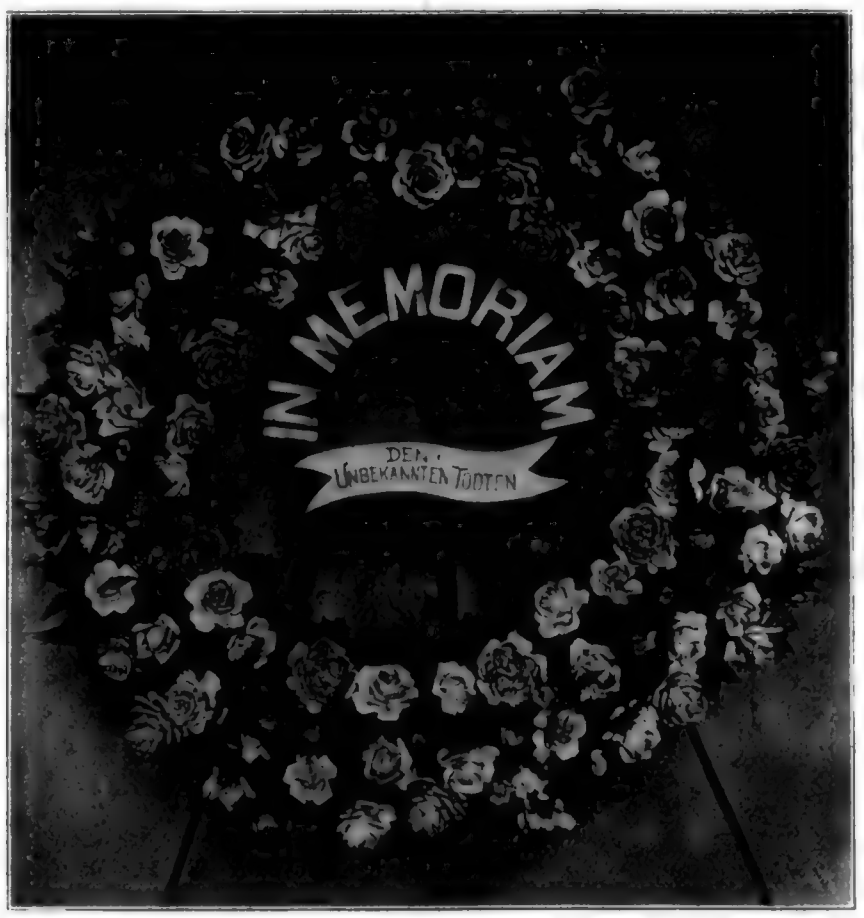
Wm. J. Young, Jr., of Germantown, is hard at work rebuilding three of his greenhouses.

Bayersdorfer & Co. are busy today receiving and unpacking heavy importations.

The glorious Fourth was true to its name, bright and cool, an ideal holiday.

Be Straight.

You say your stuff did not all sell;
The reason why you cannot tell;
You know you have not done so well.
Always be straight; always be straight.



You have to walk instead of ride,
Must turn from the gay show aside,
It is the ebb and not flow tide.
Always be straight; always be straight.

Good men's regard does not destroy
Your loved ones' peace of mind and joy;
Bright hope and self-respect, my boy,
Depend on being straight, depend on being straight.

AN ARTIFICIAL WREATH.

A. Herrmann, the florists' supply dealer, has made a handsome wreath to be placed on the graves of the unidentified dead of the Slocum disaster, at Lutheran cemetery, on Long Island, next Sunday, July 10. The wreath is more than four feet in diameter and the easel on which it stands is nine feet. Porcelain roses and buds to the number of 224 were used in the piece, which is of a style largely used and greatly admired in that section of Long Island. The inscription on the piece, translated in English, is "In Memory of the Unknown Dead."

Wreath by A. Herrmann for the Slocum Dead.

PITTSBURG, PA.—H. B. Beatty has ordered a handsome silver loving cup to be awarded the winner in the bowling contest at St. Louis, also three smaller prizes.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The holiday opened clear and hot and, as expected, exercised no appreciable effect upon the wholesale market. Prices remain on an even summer keel and there will be "still water" until September. The usual stagnation of the summer is now established. Quotations are formal and unstable. The cleaning up daily gives no thought to real value. The bargain hunters reap a harvest. The street merchants do the bulk of the selling. Wholesale stores close early and many of the retailers would like to, if the custom could be made universal. Mr. Bowe tells me he contemplates closing from Saturday noon until Monday during July and August. With the exception of a boy for emergency work, this system could be profitably followed by every retailer in the city.

Every hour of rest and consideration given the faithful employes now will bring four fold loyalty and effort when the strenuous period returns. The retail florists' business is an abnormal enterprise at best. Regular hours in the busy season are impossible and a more patient, willing and uncomplaining service can be found in no other line of work in the country. When necessity arises, an all night session is accepted with placidity.

In the wholesale market the supply of lilies continues unusually large. Down at John Scott's, in Flatbush, I saw thousands of Harrisii just opening, and this is but one of many sources in this vicinity that has kept the lily in such profuse supply since Easter. Low prices still prevail. Southern gladioli are here and are affecting prices, while sweet peas still bring about one-fourth the quotations of a year ago, notwithstanding extra quality. Many of the wholesalers are away for their annual rest. Some give daily attention to recreative equine interests, and many find the innumerable pleasure resorts around New York sufficient fountains of recuperation.

Various Notes.

Arthur T. Boddington is back from a very successful trip and already finds larger conveniences a necessity, so he is removing to 342 West Fourteenth street, where he will have all facilities for the development of his business to any extent.

Wm. Elliott & Sons held their last auction for the season last Tuesday, after a successful season and good prices as compared with former years.

The present week will close the auctions at Cleary's Horticultural Hall. Here, too, business has been excellent.

The Herald Square Exhibition Hall has been positively decided upon for the great fruit, flower and vegetable show of the American Institute, November 10 to 17.

A meeting of the Rose Society's incoming officers was held last Friday at the secretary's office, Alex. Montgomery, John N. May, Henry Siebrecht, Sr., B. Dorrance and Secretary Barron being present. Letters of regret were read from Messrs. Burton, of Philadelphia, and Welch of Boston. The prospects and prize schedule were discussed. Mr. Montgomery announced great enthusiasm around Boston, a large increase of the membership of the society and several life members secured since the Philadelphia meeting. Colonel Pfaff has offered a $50 silver cup for the best group of roses in pots, not climbers, and special prizes will be given by the Boston Gardeners' and Florists' Club and by the famous "Old Guard." Benjamin Dorrance gives a $100 cup for the best display of cut roses, competition by growers outside of a radius of 150 miles of Boston. Jno. B. Nugent offers $50 divided, $25 for the best vase of fifty Liberties and $25 for the best vase of new roses of late introduction. Pres. Montgomery's prize is for twenty-five roses of American origin. Further special prizes are solicited, and all sections of the country are appealed to for loyal support of the society. Secretary Barron says the western representation is increasing since the reawakening of interest and it is a matter of public record that one prominent western member has already shown his practical loyalty, a good example which he hopes will be largely followed. The meeting will be arranged for about the middle of March and it is unnecessary to say anything of Boston hospitality.

Hanfling & Kleppner, a new supply house, have some fine novelties on exhibition at 114 West Twenty-eighth street.

Wm. Ghormley is gradually improving in health and will be back at headquarters in good time for the reawakening of business.

The demand for the 2½-inch pots of Scottii has been universal. Mr. Scott has shipped many to Canada and California and to every intervening city and the demand continues. He is filling several of his houses with plants in 6, 8 and 10-inch pots for the retail trade and has many orders booked for the 14-inch tub plants from the leading retailers.

an accomplished fact, and among the directors are Messrs. Birnie, Daly, Steinhoff and Lenker. The ultimate completion of the long desired market building seems sure. Shares are selling at $10 each and an over subscription will be the next announcement.

The wife of Mr. Moore, of Moore, Hentz & Nash, has undergone a successful operation for appendicitis and is convalescing rapidly at the Roosevelt hospital in this city.

Florists' Club Outing.

Notwithstanding a cloudy morning the fourth annual outing was a decided success. The threatening weather, the Slocum disaster, the absence of many from the city, illness, etc., combined to keep scores away, but a happy crowd of 200 enjoyed the day thoroughly and voted it the most harmonious and delightful of the annual celebrations. The attendance of children was very gratifying. Louis Schmutz, Sr., proved his loyalty by bringing nearly all his children and grandchildren, and his youth by running and handspring agility and by winning one of the bowling prizes. It's a pity all the club's members could not make an equally practical show of interest. There should be no limit to the attendance at this yearly festival, and next year a crowd of less than 400 will be discreditable. By furnishing the novelty of another park selection and a $3 ticket for the unmarried men it can easily be accomplished.

The prizes were all valuable and worthy of the efforts made to win them. The distribution on the way home made the most hilarious hour of the day. Nearly everyone of the young folks were remembered. Dancing at the grove and on the boat was enjoyed by the young people. John Birnie's children gave their specialties. The time passed too quickly, and not one in attendance had anything but praise for the committee, whose efforts had brought about the perfect arrangements for the day.

Cleary's special race for a $35 suit of clothes was the most interesting of the day, with Siebrecht, W. B. DuRie, John Scott, Alf. Zeller, Louis Schmutz, Sr., Jos. Manda, Chas. Lenker and several other growers in it. The pots were placed five feet apart and covered 250 feet of space. Each pot contained a sealed envelope with a number from one to fifty. It was a novel struggle and everybody seemed glad to have Charley Lenker win, with a total of 170 points. Mr. DuRie received a severe blow on the eye as his share of the encounter.

The ball game was a triumph for the married men. If Clarence Saltford had not sprained his ankle the result might have been reversed. Julius Roehrs, Jr., "ran like a deer," or a "dear" the ladies declared. The champagne prizes to the winners, given by Mr. Nugent, were religiously taken home to be opened.

Nearly every lady took part in the bowling match, for the handsome prizes furnished by President Traendly. The lady who won first prize this season, Mrs. Louis Schmutz, Jr., captured the booby prize a year ago.

J. W. Reimels, Jr., started the contests and Harry Bunyard was omnipresent all day, as usual, and tireless, having fully recovered from his illness.

The handicap fat man's race was a fierce contest. Jno. B. Nugent, 222 pounds, and F. H. Traendly, 204, finished abreast, the award going to Nugent by a nose. The president won the 175-pound special, however, "pulled up" and strong.

Few married ladies would admit over 40, but those who did ran like two-year-olds. There were no unmarried ladies present over 25, so a special race was created for Jos. Millang's box of candy. It took a score of 81 in five frames to win Jno. Birnie's fine ink stand, and an outsider from Hoboken opened our eyes and secured first bowling prize with a total of 105.

The following were the prize winners in the various contests, the first, second and third prizes being awarded in the order named:

Girls' race under 8, Marion Hughes, Ellen Lenker, Ethel Donaldson.
Boys' race under 10, Arthur Weston, Edward Manda, Alex. Eihler.
Girls' race under 10, Jean Birnie, Cora Lenker, G. Hirschkin.
Boys' race under 12, W. Eihler, W. Hughes, Chas. Barnes.
Girls' race under 12, Annie Birnie, Lucy Butterfield, Charlotte Traendly.
Boys' race under 14, W. Burns, H. Reimels, W. Nugent.
Girls' race under 14, Emma Graham, Belle Reimels, Olive Eihler.
Boys' race under 16, G. Harvey, E. S. Butterfield.
Girls' race under 16, L. Zeller, S. Zeller, Josephine Traendly.
Girls' race under 20, A. Birnie, E. Nugent.
Ladies, unmarried, over 18, Miss Manda, Miss Kessler.

Half-mile walking match, N. Gottlieb, G. Hildenbrandt.
Race, 50 yds., R. J. Irwin.
Long running jump, D. Scott, W. Eihler.
Quarter mile, fat men, 175 lbs. and over, F. H. Traendly, J. P. Manda.

Ball game won by Fred Lentz, P. Kessler, D. Sullivan, W. Brogart, R. J. Irwin, S. Schenck, J. Donaldson, T. Hahn and G. Hildenbrandt, married men.

Over $250 was spent in prizes and dozens of useful and valuable articles were bestowed by the generous and loyal donors.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Extreme dullness now reigns in the flower market, a condition which is likely to last for two or three months. There is plenty of stock coming in, much of it very poor in quality, for which there is little or no demand. Roses are getting very small, Brides and Maids being miserable. Beauties are also very poor.

Carnations still bring $1 to $1.50 for fine stock, but a lot of rubbish is almost given away. Sweet peas, gypsophila, stocks, larkspurs, nymphæas, candytuft, sweet sultan, outdoor mignonette and Lilium elegans and candidum are seen in quantity.

June, 1904, may be classed as a cool month, although decidedly warmer than the same month in 1903. The mean temperature for Boston was 64 degrees, against a ten years' average of 66 degrees. Our most uncomfortable day was on June 26, when the thermometer rose to 95 degrees and seemed to stay there about all day, if one's feelings were any index. Crops look decidedly better than at this time a year ago. They have a deficiency of 303 degrees to make up since January 1, so we may pleasurably anticipate some hot waves between now and Thanksgiving.

Various Notes.

Hitchings & Co., 819 Tremont building, Boston, have been awarded the following additional contracts: Arthur Little, Phillips Beach, one greenhouse; Winslow T. Williams, Yantic, Conn., conservatory, palm house and greenhouse; F. A. Sayles, Pawtucket, R. I., palm house, plant house, two vegetable houses, two graperies, violet house and carnation house; R. C. Vanderbilt, Newport, two greenhouses and workroom. They have also contracted to build an extensive range for W. K. Vanderbilt, at Great Neck, L. I., N. Y.

Several of the city florists are starting to overhaul their stores and make improvements and employes are going on their annual vacations.

After considerable agitation the new Independent Co-operative Flower Market has finally been incorporated. Chas. E. Dickerman, the Dorchester carnation grower, is president; Geo. W. Ayer, Reading, Mass., treasurer; Wilfrid Wheeler, Concord, Mass., clerk. Directors in addition to the foregoing, E. Wood, Lexington; E. Cartwright, Wellesley; J. W. Foote, Malden; N. F. Comley, Lexington; John McFarland, North Easton; Donald Carmichael, Wellesley Mass. The capital stock of $5,000 is largely subscribed and the new concern expects to do a thriving business.

Dr. C. L. Marlatt, entomologist to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, is in Boston to superintend the investigation of the federal government of the moth pest in Massachusetts. Dr. Marlatt discovered a parasite of the San Jose scale in China, which when introduced proved very effective and we trust he may be able to bring something to thin the rapidly increasing hords of gypsy moths, which are doing fearful destruction just now.

Bostonians enjoyed cool and comfortable weather on "the great and glorious Fourth." Thanks also to the vigilance of Police Commissioner Emmons, fireworks were less of a nuisance than usual and accidents fewer. More than one florist took advantage of the fine weather, following a damp spell, to get some of his hay under cover.

Farquhar & Co. are making extensive alterations in their seed store. The ground floor in future will be given up entirely to counter trade, while all mail orders will be filled on the second floor.

Harry Cole, for many years gardener to Cyrus Lothrop, North Easton, Mass., has purchased the greenhouses and stock of A. D. Copeland, on Copeland street, Campello, Mass. There is about 6,000 feet of glass and a general stock, including orchids, which will be grown by Mr. Cole.

One or two growers in this vicinity see a prospect of good returns in growing narcissus and other bulbs for market. The writer was shown bulbs of Narcissus Emperor Von Sion and poeticus, the past week, quite equal to the Holland grown stock. There would seem to be an opening in this line for some wide awake florists. W. N. Craig.

The New Market.

Mr. Craig's recent notes on the new flower market in Boston seem to indicate that he has been misinformed as to the true character of the movement. The new market has been incorporated with fifty stockholders, including some of the most honest, industrious gentlemanly and sober element among the flower growers of Massachusetts, also having the kindly assistance and best wishes of a good many of the Boston storekeepers. W. C. Ward.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The cut flower trade has been somewhat slow the past week and has about dwindled down to summer stillness, as commencements, weddings and social work is done for this season. There is very little outlet for the stock that comes in, which, though not so plentiful as it has been, is quite enough for the demand. There is also a general decrease in values.

This is Independence day, a holiday which is not much good for the florists' business and the only one when our help can take a whole day off for enjoyment. In stock such roses as American Beauty, Bride, Kaiserin and Bridesmaid of extra quality clean out fairly well each day, as the supply of this quality is very limited just now. First and second grades of these are more plentiful, but the demand not so great. President Carnot and Liberty have a big call when fancy; price from $3 to $5 per hundred.

The carnation stock is still somewhat heavy, though the bulk of it is of poor quality. Henry Baer, of Peoria, Ill., is sending in some good fancy stock of these to Kuehn, which average $2 per 100. From $1 to $1.50 is the price for home grown stock. These are quite plentiful. Sweet peas are still crowding the market. The white, pink and lavender are very fine and have the call. The wholesale houses are having big demand for these, still prices remain cheap; $1.50 per 1,000 is asked for fancy varieties. Short stock brings from 50 to 75 cents per 1,000, but a great many are left unsold. Good lily of the valley is still to be had at $3 and $4 per 100. Smilax is plentiful and so are other greens.

Most of the growers are hard at work replacing the old stock with young plants and the general summer work, such as repainting, repairing and building, is now going on everywhere.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club's meeting which takes place next Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock will be the most important meeting the club has had in many years and the members to a man should attend. Convention matters of importance will be discussed. The nomination of officers will take place. This alone should be of great interest to all the members. The essay of Brother Dunford promises to be interesting for growers and retailers alike.

Our old friend, "Billy" Kasting, of Buffalo, is here this week as a delegate to the democratic convention, which is in session. "Billy" may be the dark horse that is spoken of.

Mrs. M. S. Vesey, of Fort Wayne, Ind., was a visitor the past week, the guest of the Misses Meinhardt.

August Juergens, of Peoria, Ill., spent last week here taking in the Fair.

Geo. M. Kellogg was down from Pleasant Hill, Mo., last week on one of his monthly trips to learn convention news.

Mr. O'Neil, of Chicago, spent a week in the city calling on the trade and the World's Fair. The Pike had great attractions for Mr. O'Neil.

R. F. Tesson, chairman of the shooting committee, reports that he has selected Dupont's park for the shooting contest during the convention, which takes place Thursday afternoon, August 18, at 2 p. m. At this park all the great shooting contests of the past have taken place. Ammunition and guns can be had at the park at a reasonable price.

Frank M. Ellis, chairman of the hotel committee, has a large number of hotels and rooms on his list at a very low price and any of the S. A. F. members who expect to attend the convention would do well to correspond with Mr. Ellis, at 1316 Pine street, and have rooms reserved for them. All other committees are hard at work completing arrangements for the coming convention. Carl Beyer has already secured a number of valuable prizes for the bowlers.

Bowling.

The florist bowlers had a hot time last Thursday night. The convention team, composed of Messrs. Kuehn, Beyer, Miller, Ellison and Beneke, met the Strong Palace team, champions of the city league this year. The florists were defeated by three pins, total number of pins counting, though they won the last two games of the three played. The totals were as follows:

Team	1	2	3	Total
Florists	791	835	860	2486

The Market.

Receipts have decreased materially during the past week. Many growers have come to the conclusion that it was useless to carry their stock farther into the summer. Results are particularly manifest in the rose department. The cuts of Beauty are now very light and there is very little stock of what can be called good quality. Bride and Bridesmaid are more plentiful, but there are few of the latter which are of good color, and mildew is still very prevalent. Brides seem in much better shape than Maids and are in fair demand, as funeral work has been plentiful in the last few days. The best stock is finding a good market, but the lower grades are still jobbed off to the Greeks. There is a ready sale for the few Chatenay which are in the market, and Liberty is in good demand because of the shortage of Beauties. Kaiserin is not plentiful and selling well.

While receipts of carnations are less than they were a week ago, there are still more than the market can consume. Only a small part of the receipts can be sold at anything like a satisfactory price to the growers, and it is difficult to dispose of the low grades at any price at all. There are still quantities of sweet peas in the market, but the quality has improved and they are in better shape. During the week the candidum lilies from Benton Harbor have been arriving. This is a crop of short duration and this year of little profit, for it has been difficult to move the large receipts at even $1 per 100, where the market was formerly $2 to $3. There are quantities of peonies still to be had, but there is a noticeable tendency to steer clear of the quantities of poor stuff that are offered and pay a fair price for good goods. A few asters are seen. Water lilies are salable for window decorations and feverfew and such items find an outlet for the same purpose.

The shipping demand has been very light in the last few days and the local trade is largely confined to funeral work, conditions which are likely to prevail for the next two months.

Various Notes.

E. Kitzinger, who has been doing a thriving business at 568 N. Ashland avenue, will move into more spacious quarters August 1 and has leased the store at 183 W. Division street, corner of Milwaukee avenue.

E. Amerphol, proprietor of the Janesville Floral Co., Janesville, Wis., has bought two of the Albert Fuchs greenhouses and will remove them for re- erection at his place.

Leonard Kill, Mrs. Kill and Mrs. Peter Reinberg leave tonight to spend two or three weeks at Colorado Springs.

N. J. Wietor went to Hackley, Wis., Tuesday evening to spend a couple of weeks at fishing.

Sam Graff has returned from a trip to Mt. Clemens and Buffalo.

E. C. Amling went to Lake Marie with his family yesterday to spend a week with the bass.

E. E. Pieser, of the Kennicott Bros. Co., is planning a vacation trip into British Columbia, where he has interests.

F. F. Benthey says it is notable the way the crop of Brides is holding out. They are cutting about 2,000 a day, very fair stock.

The carnation plants in the field are doing well in spite of the lack of rain. We have had very cool weather so far, the deficiency as compared to normal being 618 degrees. Many of the growers are ready to begin benching within a week or ten days.

Weiland & Risch are first in the field with carnation plants ready for benching. They have a big stock of Lawson in fine shape.

Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Hauswirth and Mr. and Mrs. Kochman are spending a week at The Dells of Wisconsin. Mrs. Kochman is better known to the trade as Annie Kreitling.

In the practice bowling match Tuesday evening, the "scrubs" were given a handicap of sixty pins over the St. Louis convention team and beat the experts by just that number of points.

S. W. Pike, of St. Charles, Ill., was in town Tuesday.

For Sweet Charity.

The wholesale houses in Chicago are being overrun every day by Sisters from the different institutions asking for flowers. This practice has grown from where, a few years ago, only one Sister would call occasionally to now not less than ten a day, and on special church holidays up to fifteen to eighteen. They visit all of the houses, so that when they leave the market they have both arms full of packages. Some even have a wagon or buggy in waiting. These flowers are taken to hospitals, churches, convents and schools. The habit has grown on them so that they ask for certain kinds, not what you want to get rid of and can spare. Certain feast days require certain colors. If I should have white to spare and they want pink, they tell me so. What began as a charity we all favored has got to be a nuisance.

Now let us look at the other side, from the retailers' viewpoint. Formerly these institutions bought what they needed from a florist in the neighborhood, or came down town and bought what they needed. Their purchases would range from $2 to $15, as the occasion demanded. The school children, for confirmation or communion days, would buy flowers from the florist. Now they buy, and are asked to, from the Sisters in charge of the schools. We wholesalers give them the flowers; the retailer sits there and looks on. In some cases I am told that they call on the florist and buy the ferns. Why, we ought to supply the ferns also. I don't see why we don't.

Are we doing justice to ourselves and to the retailers? I say, "No." I for one will cut this traffic out and hope that all the wholesalers will do the same, and give the retailer the trade he is entitled to. We look for his business and if we give away flowers to his patrons, we are only cutting off our own noses for sweet charity's sake. We have lost the business of the public schools through the ban put on flowers by Mr. Cooley. We have only the sectarian schools left. Let them buy their flowers; they will, when they find they cannot get them given to them. Most institutions use them for altar decoration. All of these institutions are able to pay for the flowers, charity hospitals excepted. I know a number of florists who look for this business for their support and, while they used to have it, they don't any more.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., C. N. Page, Des Moines, Ia; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 23rd annual meeting will be held on the St. Lawrence, June, 1905.

THE Bermuda lilies, first shipments, are due at New York next week.

A. T. BODDINGTON has removed to 342 W. Fourteenth street, New York.

J. W. RATEKIN, Shenandoah, Ia., reports the past season the best in the history of the house, covering twenty years. The 1905 catalogue will be seventy-two pages with an edition close to 250,000 copies.

J. MARTENS, lily of the valley exporter, of Hamburg, Germany, while in Chicago July 2 received the sad news of the sudden death of his wife and immediately started for home. He has the sympathy of his many friends in the seed trade.

A CANNER at Chicago says that "no matter how the crop reports may read, it is too early to take it for granted that the small corn pack of 1903 is going to be repeated this year. The year is too young for anybody to say to what extent the crop will be affected by the low vitality of the seed and the lateness of the season."

IT has been suggested that seedsmen might add much to the efficiency of their clerks by establishing a noonday class for the discussion of important points bearing upon the method of growth and distinguishing characteristics of the different vegetables and flowers, some posted member of the firm or head clerk acting as leader.

VISITED CHICAGO: Ernest Hermes, representing A. Le Coq & Co., Darmstadt, Germany, has been calling on the seed trade throughout the United States for the past month, visiting the St. Louis Exposition, where his house has an exhibit of grass and field seeds. He reports latest advices from Germany to the effect that good crops are in prospect again this year, with prices likely to be on a level with last year except on a few unimportant items.

CONDITIONS IN KENTUCKY.

Wood, Stubbs & Co., Louisville, Ky., write as follows under date of June 28:

The outlook for trade conditions at the present time is fair for the coming season, and crops of grass seeds generally promise good yields. Kentucky blue grass is considerably larger crop than has been made for several years and prices will be lower. Concerning orchard grass, there are conflicting reports by growers, but on the whole a fair crop may be expected. We anticipate prices to be somewhat lower than last year. Red Top is looking well and from the present indications there will be a good, full crop; prices about the same as last year, possibly a little less.

Onion sets have not done well up to the present time and are suffering severely with dry weather. We do not anticipate a good crop of these, but favorable weather will bring them out considerably. Crops of wheat have turned out better than for several years.

Garden seed crops generally have done fairly well, though lack of rain will entail shortage in the potato crop. There has been a large acreage of tobacco planted over the state, due to the high prices obtained for last year's crop, and the crop at the present writing is reported in good growing condition.

The crop of onion seed grown in this locality is very large, though we do not anticipate such low prices as last year, as the indications are that the sets will move off freely and it will stimulate the production of this crop to some extent.

Louisville onion sets are recognized as very superior quality, especially for late keeping in the spring, and we ship annually large quantities of sets throughout all parts of the United States from Maine to California. This is true of all seeds, as this point is fast being recognized by important dealers of other sections as one of the sources of supply for seed crops.

We are growing large quantities of selected seed corn, both field and sugar, selected seed wheat, winter turf oats, millets and cow peas, while Louisville being situated in the center of production for nearly all grass seeds and red clover, supplies enormous quantities of these items.

SEEDLESS VEGETABLES.

The following extract from a publication of the D. Landreth Seed Company, serves to point to the intense scientific development of horticultural practice of the present day:

To indicate the intensive watchfulness, mental application and persistent physical effort of thoughtful students of vegetable science to develop additional types, attention is called to the introduction of seedless fruits and vegetables. Every one is familiar with the seedless orange, introduced in 1880, and now very generally on the market. To this is to be added the seedless apple, plum, grape, currant, stocks of all of which are about ready to be introduced, but all of which affect the nurserymen rather than the seedsmen.

The active promoter in new things will not be happy till the seedless development, at present bearing only on hard-wooded plants, is carried into the soft-wooded class. In fact, it has already been successful in that direction, there benig already a seedless watermelon and a seedless tomato. It would seem that in the order of cucurbitacea the greatest opportunities are presented, but it will be accomplished in other families. Efforts will not cease until we have not only seedless watermelons and tomatoes, but seedless cantaloupes, cucumbers, squashes, peppers, pumpkins and egg plants.

Of course, seedless vegetables will have to be propagated by cuttings, the race kept alive by continuously carrying over in glass houses the successive parent plants throughout the year, each generation affording slips for the next.

Indeed, if seedless vegetables ever become of much value, their place will be found in the forcing house, rather than in the field, as all culture of seedless plants will have to be done with the slips or cuttings started under glass, and this, fortunately, saves the seedsman from being shut out entirely, otherwise his occupation will be half gone, provided always that the seedless fruit were better than the old types.

BALTIMORE.

Gilbert Patterson died last week at the home of his niece, Mrs. Barron. He was 84 years of age. The deceased had retired from active business some ten or twelve years ago. The funeral took place Sunday, July 3, at Govanstown Presbyterian cemetery. The active pallbearers were: I. H. Moss, Wm. Madsen, F. G. Burger, John Donn, Chas. Bucher, and C. Waldenberg, all being members of the Gardeners' Club, of which the deceased was an active member. The officers and members attended the funeral in a body.

Many of the stores were closed on the Fourth, others remaining open only long enough to fill the few small orders on hand. The Exchange closed at 12 o'clock, having very little stock on hand.

Business on a whole is satisfactory, not much good stock, not much business. So it balances up about as might be expected at this season. Maman Cochets are beginning to come in freely. Carnations and indoor roses are holding up very well. Greens are not much sought after. Roses are going at $2 to $4, carnations 50c to $1.25 per 100, peas 15 to 25 cents per 100. A. F.

BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO.

This town was visited by a severe hail storm on Thursday, June 30, which did much damage to crops and flowers, but no glass was broken. The hail piled up in places six inches deep and some was found lying around on Saturday morning. The foliage of such plants as cannas and caladiums was cut into shreds and nasturtiums were stripped to the stalk. In vegetables Lima beans seemed to suffer most, some of the early sowings being completely ruined. The season here so far has been very cool and wet; on Saturday the thermometer stood at 48 degrees. Most flowering plants have made very little growth so far, except dahlias and asters; they are looking excellent.

Fort Smith will have its second annual flower show this fall. B. D. Crane will be director and A. A. Pantet will be manager. The premium list is in course of preparation and will be issued in a few days.

A. G. Lee & Bro. report a very material increase in their business this spring. The flower show will be held in their large double store, with its four floors, which are offered free of charge.

C. J. Brockman will again engage in cut flower growing after three years spent in other pursuits. He has employed a grower to take charge.

G. H. Krone is showing some fine ferns. He is a believer in rich diet for this specialty.

Johnson & Co. are building a new greenhouse for cut flower purposes.

A. A. Pantet & Co., who are the largest growers here, have nearly completed the remodeling of their establishment. They expect by this means to double their output and hope to soon take up the wholesale business.

There is talk of organizing a florists' club here and we all hope it will succeed.

A ten-year-old plant of Phœnix reclinata at Pantet & Co.'s is showing a magnificent spike of bloom which is a great curiosity. ANDREA.

FERGUS FALLS, MINN.—S. N. Mehlin is building a considerable addition to his greenhouse on Mill street, planning to grow most of his cut flower requirements next season.

The Market.

It is a hard matter at this time of the year to find anything that is of sufficient interest to write about. The Fourth of July is now a thing of the past and with it the last lively business that we can hope for until September. An occasional funeral order will help to keep stock moving, but otherwise there is nothing. Then, too, it is a good thing that there is not so much business, as flowers are now getting pretty scarce.

There are practically no roses at all. Carnations are not nearly so plentiful, but some of them are of very good quality for so late in the season. Sweet peas, though, are coming by the thousand and they are of fine quality. But owing to the large numbers of them they scarcely pay for the picking. Lilies have been in good demand but are now scarce. There is plenty of feverfew, stocks, candytuft, etc., and not such a very lively demand for it. Shasta daisies of fine quality are to be had and there are lots of them, but they don't sell any too well. A few of the best bring $1 per 100, but most of them sell at about 25 cents. Smilax, plumosus, Sprengeri, adiantum and eastern ferns are plentiful.

Various Notes.

Saturday is the regular meeting of the Florists' Society and the new officers will take hold for the first time. A meeting of the board was held the past week and they elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Ben. George, president; Gus Adrian, vice-president; George Murphy, secretary and J. W. Rodgers, treasurer.

Tickets are out for the annual outing to be held Thursday, July 21, at Coney Island. They are to be had at all the commission houses and of the members of the committee. There will be all kinds of events for men, women and children, with prizes for all. The bowling contests for both ladies and men, also the ball game, will be the especial features. The committee is hustling things and there will, without doubt, be a big crowd this year.

E. G. Hill was a caller.

Paul F. Peters, who lived on Price Hill, died on June 28. He was born March 25, 1855, in Dahlen, about thirty miles from Leipzic, Germany. He spent his early days at Schloss Thallwitz, in the park of Prince Henry the 67th of Reuss. Later his father conducted an extensive florist's business in Leipzic. Paul at 17 years of age journeyed to Brazil, where he lived several years. Then came to the United States and finally settled in Cincinnati, where he was engaged with his brother, C. A. Peters, in the landscape gardening, also general florists' business. He leaves two brothers, P. F. Peters, of Cincinnati, and C. A. Peters, of Huntington, W. Va., also two sisters who are living in Leipzic.

C. J. OHMER.

LA FAYETTE, IND.

J. Baldwin, the veteran florist of this city, died at the home of his daughter in Cleveland, O., June 29. He had been seriously ill for four months or more. He had a small but prosperous establishment at 1917 Kossuth street.

COLUMBUS, O.—Cards are out for the wedding of William Graff and Miss Theresa Aaron July 20.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—Geo. Van Horn, who has been with Louis Unverzagt for twenty years, has bought the stock of the Capitol Greenhouse and will continue the business.

SOUTH BEND, IND.—Herman Beyer, who was formerly with the Peterson Nursery at Chicago and recently in charge of the Oliver greenhouses here has succeeded Jno. G. Barker as superintendent of parks.

PAOLA, KANS.—On the night of July 2 a burglar entered the home of A. Roth and robbed him of a small sum of money after beating him so severely that he is not expected to live. Mr. Roth is 50 years of age.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

THE fall business of the dealers in ornamental nursery stock promises to be exceptionally good this season, partly due to losses last winter.

IF the national government is to continue the inspection of meats there is no reason why it should not provide for the inspection of nursery stock, since its failure to do so inflicts a loss both on dealer and planter.

THIS is proving a bad season in many sections for nurserymen whose practice it is to guarantee their plantings for one, two or more years. The hard winter, the late spring and the lack of rain are causing more than the usual percentage of loss.

ARTICLES of incorporation of the American Peony Society were filed at Albany, N. Y., July 2. The directors named are J. H. Humphreys, of Philadelphia; E. A. Reeves, Cleveland; C. S. Harrison, York, Neb.; W. A. Peterson, Chicago, and G. A. Bryant, Princeton, Ill.

"Where a man has a local market," says an eastern nurseryman, "he can make something of Christmas trees, but if he has to ship them to the large cities to be sold on commission he had better go to work for 50 cents a day. We have been growing them for several years."

PROF. L. C. CORBETT, horticulturist in the Bureau of Plant Industry, U. S. Department of Agriculture, is the author of a 24-page monograph on the strawberry, just issued as Farmers' Bulletin No. 198. The subject is treated fully and the bulletin will be of value to every grower of the fruit, including the nurserymen who are producing the plants by the hundreds of thousands each year.

As a rule, says Charles Black, a tree should never be planted any deeper than it has stood in the nursery, and a great many trees are ruined by planting them too deep. But there are some trees like the quince that it would not injure. If you have an apple or a standard pear tree planted a little deep on ordinary soils there would be no injury. But if you plant a peach tree on any soil three, four or five inches deeper than it stood in the nursery, it will very often not be successful.

NAME OF TREE.

We enclose a few sprays of a very pretty tree, of which we would like to know the name. It grows of a conical shape, without trimming.

J. H. D. & SON.

The name of the tree is the American white basswood, Tilia heterophylla. It is also called the variable-leaved linden. The conspicuous veining on the under side of the leaves is one of its distinguishing characteristics. This makes a very pretty tree, attaining a height of from thirty to fifty feet. W. N. CRAIG.

AMPELOPSIS VEITCHII.

Will some one kindly state the cause of a sort of blight on Ampelopsis Veitchii? In this locality there are several vines partially wilted, as though something were at the roots, but it only affects perhaps one branch. The only thing we discover is a worm similar to the caterpillar, only smaller, but they work in the leaves. Can anyone suggest a remedy? S. F. C.

The trouble with Ampelopsis Veitchii seems to be very general this year, but it has been more or less prevalent for a number of years. We are unable to tell the cause of whole branches dying, although we have been troubled with it for years, nor have we found anyone who can find a proper cause for the same. To some extent the wholesale dying noticed this year may justly be attributed to the late severe winter. Many plants leaved out and then withered away, having little vitality left.

Many of the streets in Boston have the fronts of nearly all the houses covered with Amepelopsis Veitchii, and this dying out tendency seems to be on the increase yearly. In Newport, R. I., we noticed many similar cases a few days ago. The disease acts similarly to the fire blight on pear trees, and we hope bacteriologists may be able to suggest some remedy for it.

The spotting of the leaves is quite common. Spraying with Bordeaux mixture before this blight shows itself will keep it in check. If worms are troublesome a dose of Paris green will clean them out. Disparene or arsenate of lead is equally efficacious but whitens the leaves so much that they are rather unsightly.

The late severe winter killed many Ampelopsis Veitchii in this section to the ground. It is unfortunate that these diseases are likewise affecting this best of all climbers. W. N. CRAIG.

GREENHOUSE BUILDING.

It is the general report among greenhouse material firms that the season started very inauspiciously. The big orders which may ordinarily be looked for in January were very few in number and were so sharply competed for that prices were very close. There was the usual volume of inquiries for estimates and the draughtsmen put in the customary amount of overtime, but it was slow work closing up contracts, with the result that the material men had fallen considerably below last season's record at the time frost was out of the ground. Since then the demand has been steadily gaining impetus and the late business has in many instances more than made up previous losses. It is notable that this season's building is by the hundreds of scattered florists who retail their own product rather than by the big growers for the cut flower markets, who have built so extensively in recent years.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Fred G. Burger is adding one house to his establishment this season.

DETROIT, MICH.—The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange is building a fine four-story brick building close to its present location which will soon be ready for occupancy. The basement will be used for cut flowers and the second floor for supplies, of which a large line will be carried.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

Business in cut flowers is very dull; a week of unreasonable weather with plenty of rain is partly at fault. We are in the midst of a general glut. Carnations and roses are suffering the most, and no fixed values are placed on stock. Sweet peas are very plentiful and meet with fair sale. Some few good asters are being received, but are only bought for the sake of novelty. Outdoor stock is abundant. Quantities of delphiniums, candidum lilies and gaillardias are arriving.

Various Notes.

Mrs. E. A. Williams' Knoxville plant is now well under way and will be ready about August 1. During the months of July and August the Penn avenue store will close at 5 p. m.

A. W. Smith reports business of June up to last year. This firm is handling quantities of very fine outdoor flowers from its Ohio farm.

E. C. Ludwig expects to occupy his new store room on East Diamond street, Allegheny, about August 1. With a modern greenhouse in the rear of the store Mr. Ludwig will have one of the most complete retail places in the two cities.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is handling large consignments of valley and Beauties and some very fine white irises.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Ludwig celebrated their silver wedding last Sunday, July 3.

Philip Langhans is packing his fishing tackle box. Phil showed the writer a trolling-spoon of his own handiwork, with which he intends to take a few of Mr. Roney's (Lakeview Rose Gardens) famous muskallonge out of Chautauqua lake.

W. Q. Potter has returned from Chicago and the northwest, where he was spending his vacation.

David Geddis is preparing for a trip to Templeton, Pa. Hoo-Hoo.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Ulrich Bros. are building a new greenhouse 20x71 to cost $400 at 306 Pennsylvania avenue.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Peter Becker, a former employe of the American Rose Co., hanged himself in one of the greenhouses in that establishment June 26. He was 42 years of age.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Another week of quiet business and very cool weather. Flowers of the cheaper grades are plentiful but fancy roses or carnations are not much in evidence. The retailers do not seem to mind that fact, however, as there is very little demand for stock of any kind and the cheaper they can keep their show-windows filled with flowers the better they are satisfied. It has been a very favorable season for outdoor roses of all kinds and Gen. Jacqueminot flowers have been used more lavishly than ever before to keep the display up. They sell wholesale at from $1 to $1.50 per hundred and retail at about three times that price. Carnations, except fancy stock, are plentiful and very cheap. Portia, Joost and Scott can be had at almost any figure unless they are choice, in which case they cost the retailers about $1 per hundred. The stems on the great majority of them, however, are weak and the flowers poor and they are sold principally to the street venders. Crocker, Hill, Estelle, Schwerin, Triumph and several other sorts bring $2 wholesale if they are good. Some fancy Lawson are being held at about $3 per hundred and this price is about as high as anything has reached for the past several months. Good roses are still scarce and Beauties, although offered only in small quantities, are bought up quickly enough at from $1.50 to $2 per dozen. Many of our growers are drying off their houses at this time and that always makes a scarcity of flowers.

Various Notes.

Miss Charlotte F. Williams had an elaborate decoration at the home of A. Schilling, in Oakland, on Tuesday of this week.

A visit to the nurseries of H. Plath at Ocean View, finds everything in good order. Mr. Plath devotes about twenty large houses to the culture of ferns, palms and smilax. He has probably the largest collection of adiantums in this vicinity and his stock looks remarkably well at this time. He has named his place "The Ferneries" and it fits the greenhouses well. He will be ready in a few weeks to cut some splendid long smilax.

P. J. Keller, horticultural inspector of Alameda county rejected two large cases of orchids that were being delivered to J. P. Siegfried, of Alameda, last week. Mr. Keller found a new species of orchid beetle on the plants.

GREEN LADY BIRDS.

Beginning during the month of June and continuing through July, August and September the green lady bird is one of the most destructive pests with which the grower who handles outdoor cut flowers has to contend. In many places, however, the climate is so moist, windy in the daytime and foggy during the night and early morning, that the lady bird does no damage and it is possible to grow flowers that are not half eaten up by this miserable insect. At Oakland and anywhere that is distant enough from the water so that the benefit of the foggy nights is not felt, the lady birds have everything their own way and they do a great deal of damage in the summer and early fall. They are especially fond of dahlies, coreopsis, carnations, roses and chrysanthemums and the flowers are usually destroyed long before they are out of the bud. I have tried many preparations to get rid of these troublesome lady birds and have found Paris green to be the best thing to check their ravages. A tablespoonful dissolved in a three-gallon watering pot and sprinkled copiously over the affected plants daily for a week and afterwards about twice a week throughout the season I have found to be satisfactory. Of course if a grower has a great quantity of stock it is almost out of the question to treat it in this way but I consider this the best method. The Paris green, being in such weak solution, dries off the flower and does not leave any stain that is noticeable and is perfectly harmless to the plant.

MILWAUKEE.

The Florists' Club held its regular meeting at the club room Tuesday evening and quite a large attendance was present. The club has decided to hold a picnic at Oconomowoc Lake, July 17, and the arrangements committee has arranged to charter a special car to take out the party.

It appears that there will be quite a few from here attending the convention at St. Louis and this matter will be taken up at the picnic to see how many are going.

Trade in general has been very brisk right up to the Fourth of July but since that time it has been rather quiet.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Chronicle.

Asparagus Sprengeri is in demand at Covent Garden, being used extensively for filling window boxes.

Rose Perle des Neiges is a pure white polyantha variety, with pretty and perfectly double flowers. It was given an award of merit when shown recently by W. Paul & Son, Waltham Cross.

For growing specimens of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine of the largest size, heat, atmospheric moisture and shade are essential. It is also necessary to select plants for growing in this way, choosing those which exhibit a tendency to produce lateral shoots at each joint of the central stem. The shoots should not be pinched, as they branch freely naturally, and will grow into bushy plants with a central leader, which should be supported as soon as necessary by a neat stake. In due course the side shoots should be loosely slung to this stake, in order to secure the pyramidal habit of growth to which these plants so readily lend themselves.

Cooper, Taber & Co. say of the charming French pansy, Mme. Perret: "This is a break from the Trimardeau having a great range of colors, all the flowers being tinged with red wine color. Comparing it with other strains of pansy we find this to be the earliest large-flowering variety now in culture. The flowers are not only large in size, being two and one-half inches across, but also delightfully sweet."

We find on examination that many grades of sulphur now being sold contain sulphuric acid, sometimes in quantity sufficient to injure delicate foliage. It therefore behooves all users of sulphur for horticultural purposes to stipulate, when buying, for the very best flowers of sulphur, which, when shaken up with cold water, will not appreciably affect neutral litmus.

DENVER.

Getting summer work finished up seems to be the principal business of the florists out here at the present time, and this, when properly carried out, is trying enough for anybody during the hot days we are now experiencing. Most of the florists have taken time by the forelock and have nearly everything planted out for fall and winter. Particularly is this noticeable at the Park Floral Company's establishment. Roses and carnations are away ahead of any previous year. Such stock having been planted directly after the old plants were removed to lath houses in the field, enabled them to take a good root hold in the soil before hot weather set in, and the old stock of carnations which were replanted in the canvas houses in May are doing remarkably well for stock that has bloomed well throughout the previous winter. In fact, Enchantress treated in this manner is now furnishing the best flowers in the market. Lawson has done equally as well and the returns from both are very acceptable at this time, when good flowers are scarce. Some of those summer houses are filled with roses and are now producing better character of flowers than those in the open ground, particularly in the case of American Beauties, where the flowers are a better color and stems much longer.

Owing to plenty of rain this spring perennials have been exceptionally fine. Peonies are getting quite popular on the market, and W. W. Wilmore is producing them as extensively as the dahlias and of equally good character, for which he is justly noted. The columbine is now in its prime in the mountains. It has become a commercial plant and much sought after by tourists. It should be seen in its native haunts for one to thoroughly appreciate its beauty, and under fair cultivation it is a prolific bloomer. The Park Floral Co. could cut, at any period of its blooming season, 1,000 sprays. The delphiniums are now in full bloom in the foothills. Scott had an elaborate window decoration quite recently of D. bicolor and Aquilegia cærulea, which blended very nicely and demonstrated to some extent the floral resources of our state. More work of like character would be much appreciated by the resident as well as the tourist, especially as our state is inexhaustible in good material and some of the fraternity are frequently making visits to where they are found in all their glory.

Ben Boldt has closed a deal with Daniels & Fisher for a long lease on the Mud Lake greenhouses, with the privilege of purchasing same at any time he desires.

Geo. Brinkert, of University Park, has about completed his new range of glass of about 10,000 feet.

The professional anglers of the business, Messrs. Valentine and Benson, are making extensive preparations for an indefinite siege on the speckled beauties in the Gunnison country where the finny race abound in unlimited quantity and as large as the Scotch salmon.

GREAT DIVIDE.

HARTFORD CITY, IND.—John S. Leach some time since bought out the Hartford City Floral Co., Sarah D. Anderman, deceased, and is now the only florist in the county. He operates the recently acquired property as an up-town branch.

BE EXPLICIT.

The Review is very glad to answer the inquiries of its readers, but often it is impossible to afford much light on the questioner's difficulties because of insufficient details in the query. Where conditions of soil, moisture, temperature and other important matters are not stated it is often not possible to say what is wrong; the best we can do is to say what may be the trouble. Tell us the whole story; then we are pretty sure to find a reader who has experienced the same thing and discovered a way out of the difficulty. And in queries with regard to heating, don't be afraid to go into details with regard to the character of the house or houses; how well built, age, exposures, etc. These are only a little less necessary than the dimensions and indoor and outdoor temperatures in figuring on amount of radiation, etc., and in their absence the best that can be done is to provide for piping which will be safe under ordinary conditions.

THRIPS.

The frequency with which there have been complaints of the depredations of thrips in greenhouses resulted in experiments in the treatment for this pest in the greenhouses of the Hatch Experiment Station at Amherst, Mass. It is closely allied to the grass thrips which had previously been investigated at the Station but of course the methods of combatting the insects are totally different out of doors and under glass. In the former case burning over the infected area in early spring, before the grass starts, is the recommended remedy; under glass fumigating is practiced.

It was found that burning tobacco leaves, twelve ounces to 1,000 cubic feet of space, in the greenhouse had no effect on the thrips although it killed plant lice.

With lemon oil, one part to forty-eight parts water at 120 degrees, dipping the plants killed the thrips, most of them being washed off and the rest soon dying.

Rose Leaf tobacco extract and Nicotine vaporized at a strength which did no injury to the plants, killed the thrips but more than one fumigation was necessary to reach them all. Hydrocyanic acid gas was also effective.

Albany, N. Y.—H. L. Menand has opened a wholesale florists' supply establishment at 34 William street and will also deal in decorative greens. He was formerly at Menand's Station.

TOP-HEAVY FLOWERS.

In judging the merits of flowers, from the horticultural point of view, there are many things to be considered besides the actual beauty of the individual flower, especially as nature, in her development of the evolutionary scheme, does not always see eye to eye, as it were, with humanity, the plants having been shaped in preference with a view to their better fitness for inter-relations with the insect world, and for their environment generally, independently of human influence. Hence arise many so-called defects, which it becomes the province of the selective cultivator to correct, as far as possible, and it is rare indeed for any plant to be arrived at, in which no improvable point exists. Thus, like the modest violet, we may have a charming flower of such a retiring nature as to inspire a proverb, and as this does not meet the cultivator's ideal or appreciation of its merits, he has, in course of time, coaxed the tiny flower out of its leafy retreat, and the high-class violets of today have proudly lengthened their stalks, and enlarged their petals, so as to vie fairly well with their bolder sisters.

The queen of flowers, the rose, in its many wild forms, displays itself to the best advantage, and spreads its delicately tinted blossoms for the delectation of the bees in such a fashion as to satisfy the most critical human eye, but under man's selective hand, aided by nature's wonderful sportive gifts, the simple single flower has become in many cases so large, and so overloaded with additional petals, that their very weight becomes an adverse factor to proper display, their stalks being unable to bear the blossom to show it off to the best advantage. Hence we may have two roses of equal beauty of flower, but the gardener gives the preference to the one with the better "habit."

In the cactus dahlia we have a prominent case of similar kind, i. e., charmingly formed and tinted flowers handicapped by a tendency to hide themselves within the foliage, and such a habit of growth is extremely difficult to correct. So much artificiality, indeed, has been introduced into floral culture by man, by constant selection of "points" which clash with nature's normal lines, that it is little wonder that we so often find good points in one direction counterbalanced by bad ones in another. Nature has a knack of striking a sort of balance in her works, maintaining a constant agreement between strains and stresses and corresponding strengths of structure. In culture this concordance is too frequently upset, the flowers being developed into altogether abnormal proportions, which the plant not only is called upon to bear to an unnatural extent, but actually has to contribute to, at the expense of its supporting power, owing to the concentration of the bulk of its forces in producing bloom instead of foliage. We see a marked example of this in chrysanthemums, which have become so artificialized that they cannot possibly support their heavy blossoms without sticks and repeated tyings, which, to the true lover of natural beauty, are an abomination.

From the flower dealers' point of view, these conditions of natural fitness and harmony are, of course, of less importance than to the nature lover, since it may justly be argued that flowers, which are only grown to be cut, and enjoyed in the cut form, can be dealt with on purely commercial lines, and it matters little if the stalk be too long and slender to stand the buffets of the weather, to which it is never intended to be exposed. So far, so good, but all the same, the line should be drawn there, and when we see plants intended for the garden, worked up on similar lines, it behooves the judges who determine the merits of such produce to reckno such defects as had points counting against the good ones of the flower itself. Except for plants of naturally climbing habits, the ideal garden should not be invaded by sticks and ties of any description; they should be regarded as mere crutches for cripples, and not, as they are now, as indispensable adjuncts to flowers which naturally should do without them.—Gardeners' Magazine.

FROM OUR ENGLISH EXCHANGES.

The Gardeners' Magazine.

According to M. Bernard, the co-operation of a beneficial fungus is not less essential to successful cultivation in the case of orchids than of some other plants. In a contribution to the French Academy of Sciences, M. Bernard points out that in the course of his investigations he had found that orchids make the most satisfactory growth when their roots are in association with the mycelium of a certain microscopic fungus peculiar to them. He then proceeds to say that he has succeeded in demonstrating by experiment that this association is absolutely indispensable. Cultivating the fungus by itself, and some orchids by themselves, he found that the latter could not thrive until brought into contact with the mycelium of the former, when the growth at once became normal. The presence of microscopic fungi in greater or less degree may, he believes, explain much in connection with the great difficulty of producing good orchids.

A German scientist has discovered that a current of electricity in the soil drives out the worms, snails, etc. He was using the current to dry a mould lying on the ground and noticed that worms were hurriedly struggling out of the soil. He then experimented with a small plot of ground. One terminal of an electrical circuit of 110 volts was thrust into the earth and the worms and snails at once began to crawl out of the influence of the current. He believes that the benefit to plants resulting from an electric current in the soil is due to the extermination of the parasites on the roots rather than to any direct influence. If his deduction is correct we may find in electricity a means of exterminating the minute eel-worms that so often infest the roots of roses.

A rose called Mme. N. Levavasseur, sent out by M .M. Levavasseur, Orleans, France, is said to be a "perpetual" Crimson Rambler. It was obtained by crossing the Crimson Rambler with Gloire des Polyanthas. It continues to produce flowers till checked by autumn frosts. It has been certificated by the English National Rose Society and Royal Horticultural Society.

A French nurseryman finds that in the moving of trees in full leaf in the summer months the operation is much more apt to be successful if done at night, preferably between the hours of 9 p. m. and 2 a. m.

PIPING A HOUSE.

I intend to build a greenhouse 30x 100, nine feet to ridge. What is the easiest and cheapest way to heat it by hot water? What amount of pipes shall I use? Shall I place the pit on the north end or on the west side in the middle? The house will be used for carnations, bedding stock, etc., requiring about 48 to 50 degrees at night.

J. G. S.

Your house will require 800 feet of radiation to maintain a night temperature of 50 degrees during severe weather. To supply this amount of radiation with 2-inch piping it will require thirteen runs of pipe through the house, i. e., 1,300 feet of 2-inch pipe. If the boiler is to be located at one end, which is probably best, a 3-inch riser should be carried under the ridge to the far end of the house and there divide to supply the return pipes. Where the returns are collected to re-enter the boiler a pipe connected with an expansion tank should be provided and the tank placed as far above the top of the heating system as possible; if it can be elevated fifteen feet above the ridge of the house all the better. The higher the expansion tank the greater the pressure in the system and the greater the pressure in the system the higher the temperature which can be obtained in the water in the boiler. An expansion tank with sixty gallons capacity will not be out of proportion for this plant. One of the best and in the long run cheapest expansion tanks is a galvanized iron hot water tank such as is used in house plumbing.

ORANGE, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting and exhibition of the New Jersey Floricultural Society for July was held on the first instant in the society's rooms. Instead of the brilliant display of roses of two weeks ago, were the more stately Japan iris and delphiniums which have never been shown in such perfection in Orange. It was of particular interest that the same flowers come from so many different hands, yet all of superior excellence. William Barr's gloxinias were of large size and with blooms which concealed both pot and foliage. John Crosby Brown's collection of fruits and vegetables attracted by its tasteful arrangement in which tomatoes, large for this season, held a prominent place. The plate of Lord Napier nectarine was "as pretty as a picture." So close was the contest for points that the entire evening was consumed by the judges and there was no essay or discussion.

Among the exhibitors were: John Crosby Brown, Peter Duff, gardener; Wm. Barr, Arthur Bodwell, gardener; Stewart Hartshorn, Arthur Caparn, gardener; A. Von Gaasbeck, Wm. Bennett, gardener; Mrs. Pierson, C. Ashmead, gardener; C. Hathaway, M. Hornecker, gardener; Wm. Runkle, D. Kindsgrab, gardener; O. D. Munn, John Hays, gardener; S. and A. Colgate, Wm. Reed, gardener; E. J. Brocket, Thos. Maybury, gardener. The judges were Arthur Caparn, Jos. A. Manda and Charles Ashmead.

Among the exhibits not for competition were sweet peas treated by the nitrogen fixing bacteria of the Department of Agriculture, Washington, by Wm. J. Hesse, of Newark.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

The Bermuda Lilies.

The first of the Bermuda lilies are arriving and, if an early crop is desired, there should be no delay in getting them potted; they assuredly are not benefited by being long out of the ground. Very large growers may find it an inexpensive plan to plant them on the benches in four or five inches of soil. The writer has tried them in boxes about eighteen inches square and five inches deep. It was not a success. The lily bulb, like other higher organisms, has each its own individuality. Some are stronger and earlier than others, and when on the bench or in boxes the whole space is occupied till the last lily is cut. Therefore, for the grower of a few thousand, 5-inch pots for the 5-7 bulbs and 6-inch for the 7-9s will be found the most satisfactory and economical method of forcing this most important plant.

Size of Bulbs.

We hear some growers say they never force any bulb less than a 7-9. This size may be depended upon to give the surest blooming bulb, but as the early lilies are used almost entirely as cut flowers in bunches and decorations, there is often a considerable waste of buds and, as you can't afford to give away these unexpanded buds, there is frequently a kick that you charged for more flowers than you supplied. And, again, a stalk with two open flowers and one bud can be arranged more artistically than one with four flowers and two or three buds. So, for our earliest crop, we prefer the 5-7s.

Anyone who has tried to get a batch of lilies for Easter knows how difficult it is to get in, say ninety-five per cent just right at that date. Some fourteen years ago, when we only had Harrisii for Easter, and the disease had not appeared, out of a batch of 1,100 7-9s there were just seventeen lilies that were not salable, but that was done with infinite labor, care and alertness. Those were the days we, ourselves, worked and trusted to no one's judgment.

Now, this difference in time of flowering is just what you want in the early forced bulbs, because you will begin cutting, say, November 1 and continue along until New Year's and past. At least that is what suits the grower who retails his own product.

The Best Method.

Plant as soon as received in 5-inch pots, letting the top of the bulb be even with the surface of the soil. Soil is really of little importance, yet a light loam with a fifth of thoroughly decayed manure would be the ideal. Use no fresh manure. Give them a good watering and place in a frame and see that in heavy rains water does not run in or stand under the pots. Cover the surface of the soil with an inch of thoroughly rotted manure or refuse hops and then cover the frames with heavily shaded sash. Place a 2x4 scantling or a fence board on top of the rafters of the cold frame back and front and let the sash rest on the scantling. Then there is a current of air over the pots and if the sash is heavily shaded it is cooler than it is in the open air. Watch them every few days, but with the shaded sash they will want little water while they are in the frame.

As they show a little crown of leaves above the mulch they can be picked out here and there and brought into the greenhouse, and if you can bring in 100 or 200 every week you will, after all have them in successive batches. If you give them a steady night temperature of 60 degrees in the house you will cut by the end of October. Of course, no roots have been made into the mulch, which should be shaken off at the time of removal into the house.

In concluding this rather wordy discourse on a very old and familiar subject, let me say that I consider the winter-cut lilies extremely profitable up to Easter. I never remember having a flower go to waste, and when you consider price of bulb, the little room they occupy, as well as the short time they need expensive protection, and the good price obtained for the flowers, they are one of the articles that help to pay taxes and make up for several things that are losers, and yet about ninety-nine per cent of us florists only guess at what is keeping us out of the county house.

Crimson Ramblers.

Crimson Rambler roses that were started from cut down, dormant plants in April, will, if they have been kept growing in a light house and never neglected for water, have made four or or five canes five or six feet long. They are still growing. Another mulch of rather fresh cow manure will add to the strength of growth and prevent rapid drying out. If they have made as much growth as you desire, they can be moved out of doors in the full sun in a week or two. Stand them on ashes or boards and surround the pots with litter, leaves or some material to keep the pots from drying out continually. Keep them well watered for another six or seven weeks, because if you let them get dry they will ripen their wood prematurely and are then too liable to break into lateral growth in October, and that you don't want. You want those large buds, or eyes, to remain dormant, for they are what will give you the fine breaks and trusses of bloom next winter.

The canes will, of course, ripen up in September and if we should get a warm October and these roses get soaked with rain, that is the time they want careful handling to keep them from breaking. After the wood is well ripened the plants can be laid on their sides to escape too much water at the root. These Ramblers, with anything like decent care, will flower with the greatest certainty and can be furnished

TO THE TRADE AND MEMBERS OF THE SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS AND ORNAMENTAL HORTICULTURISTS:

The time for our convention is close at hand and the busy season about at an end.

I want to remind you of the duty you owe to the Society. It is important that the membership be increased, and to that end we urge your support.

Every member should get at least one new member and as many more as he can. Especially do I call attention to the state vice-presidents.

We want to make this meeting at St. Louis a success. It should be the most successful in the history of the Society.

Do not miss this opportunity to meet old friends and make new ones – men you have heard about but never met.

The secretary will accept your application now, so send it in at once.

Let us all meet at St. Louis in August.

Yours truly,

Philip Breitmeyer.

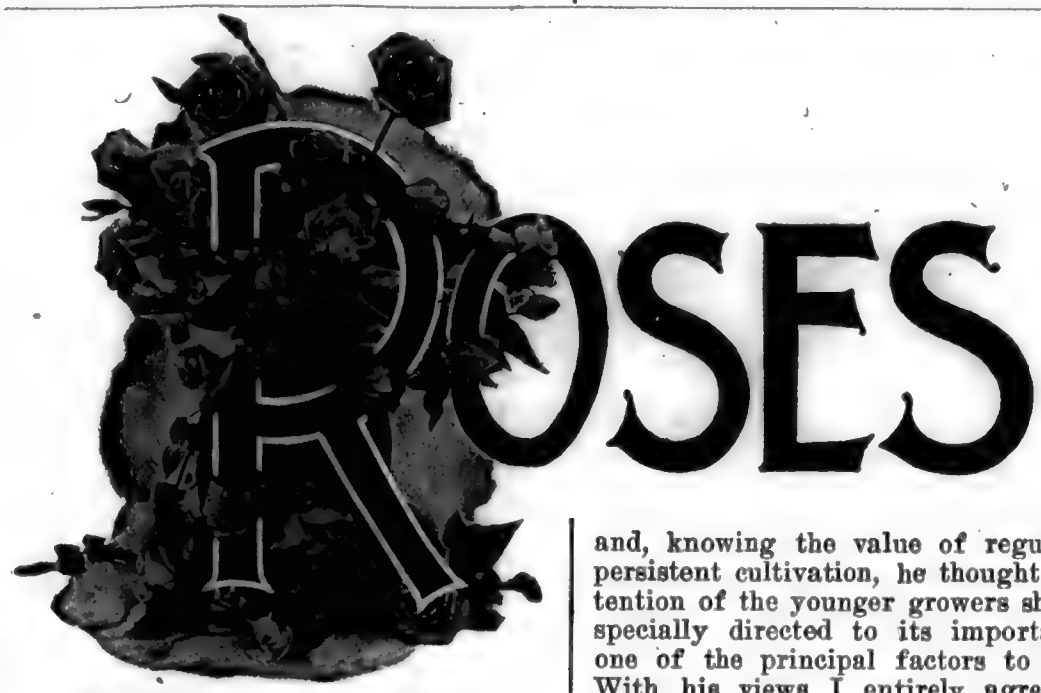
President S. A. F. and O. H.

with flowers and foliage to the rim of the pot.

The Azaleas Outdoors.

Look well after your azaleas that are plunged outdoors. They increase in size considerably during July and August and should not be allowed to crowd. A fresh mulching of manure about now will do them the greatest good, but, of course, the all-important point is to see that they do not suffer for water. If they are strong and vigorous, and the soil filled with roots, once a day is not enough on bright, hot days. Evening is the time to water, principally because the soil has all night to remain moist and the roots have long hours to enjoy the moisture. But if by the following noon your azaleas are dried out, which they likely are, as they should be in the broad sun, don't be afraid to water them. There will be no burning, no harm of any kind, but the plants will bless you for your attention.

Wetting Foliage in Sun.



The question whether it is wise and proper to water or wet the foliage of plants when the sun is shining on them was threshed out some years ago in a contemporary journal, yet it seemed no argument with practical gardeners. To think that water on the leaves of plants in sunshine hurts them, belongs to the same class of knowledge as the belief that toads produce warts on your hands or that a snake with its head cut off does not die before sundown, and many other interesting natural history facts handed down to us by keen observers who flourished before the flood.

Pruning the Hedges.

As you have a nursery column now which is always interesting, I may be allowed to say that this is an excellent time to do a lot of pruning among the ornamental trees, both deciduous and evergreen, and particularly with almost all kinds of hedges. I am not a friend of hedges of any kind except where they are needed, yet there are many situations where a formal hedge is not out of place. As has been remarked in your columns more than once this season, the beautiful little Berberis Thunbergii has no rival. It is lovely at all seasons and lucky is the man who has 50,000 of it, for it is sure to be wanted this fall to replace the miles of killed California privet. To begin with, this beautiful, absolutely hardy shrub needs little if any pruning, except to stop a strong growth here and there. To prune it into any stiff, formal shape would spoil its beauty. Privet hedges should now be pruned, not the severe shearing back that may be necessary in the spring, but just a shortening back with the shears, enough to give it a trim, neat appearance, for, unlike the berberis, a privet hedge is nothing if not trim and straight in outline.

Evergreen hedges, of Norway spruce, arbor-vitæ or, best of all, hemlock spruce (Abies Canadensis) can and should be trimmed into shape. It takes longer and perhaps more skill to prune these hedges with a knife, yet that is what should be done. The shears on a privet hedge is entirely right, but they are mutilation on the evergreen hedges.

When a tree stands alone, say on a lawn or an avenue, if not crowded, no man can improve on its beauty of form with a knife. A maple, beech, elm, sycamore or any of our shade trees, is pleasing from its very natural irregularity of growth. Still there are constantly cases where trees are spoiling from crowding. They may, by their growth, have shut off some vista you wished kept open, are getting too near the sidewalk, and there are many times occasions when "Woodman spare that tree, touch not a single bough," would not be good advice or practice, and now is a good time to use the saw and hatchet. You can see much better now, when the trees are in full leaf, the effect of crowding than you can with the bare branches. William Scott.

SEASONABLE CULTURE.

Planting being finished, the care of the stock for some time will engage our attention. This care consists of a multitude of small duties, any one of which, if neglected or if not performed at the proper time, may lead to disastrous results.

Water being one of the most essential wants, being needed in quantities sufficient during the growing period to prepare and keep the food in an assimilable form, must be supplied with a deal of intelligence and care. To the careful observer, who notes all the conditions in the house and studies the wants and requirements of his stock, and keeps also an eye on conditions outside of the house, the art of watering becomes a second nature and without this study it is impossible to approach perfection.

Ventilation, which plays such an important part in the successful culture of the rose under glass, is too often done in a haphazard sort of a way and many growers, who otherwise treat their stock fairly well, court ruin by neglecting to study and learn the real use of ventilators and the necessity of maintaining a steady temperature and a plentiful supply of pure, fresh air which accompanies their proper use.

Of equal importance to watering and ventilating in the summer treatment of young stock is the systematic cultivation of the soil. In soils suited to rose culture under glass the copious supplies of water necessary would soon cause the surface to cake and the body of the soil to become sour, in which condition evaporation is interfered with, so in order to keep the soil in a fit state to derive the full benefit of the water applied the surface must be kept well stirred up.

This cultivation should be about one inch deep and should be practiced at least once a week until the roots have approached the surface so closely that further disturbance would be injurious.

Some time ago, when conversing with a brother grower, he made the remark that he thought I did not attach enough importance to this subject in my notes and, knowing the value of regular and persistent cultivation, he thought the attention of the younger growers should be specially directed to its importance as one of the principal factors to success. With his views I entirely agree, as I have never seen a good crop produced where this was neglected or carelessly performed. Ribes.

DISBUDDING.

My roses are doing very finely; should I disbud or cut back a trifle?

L. H. W.

It is a great pleasure to know that readers of my notes are having success with their stock and any advice that I give is what I have found to be best after years of experiment, and just as I practice myself. It would simplify matters considerably if querists would be a little more explicit when stating their troubles; such as naming the varieties they want information about, and giving details as to conditions, methods of treatment, etc.

The method of disbudding as practiced by most experts where teas or hybrid teas are the crops, is to cut off about half the flower stem. This is done with the object of leaving only the best and strongest eyes to form the future flower stem. By simply picking off the buds and leaving all the eyes on the stem to break it naturally follows that there are more eyes to sustain than can be developed into flower stems and the consequence is a large crop of blind wood.

With Beauties the case is somewhat different. During the early stages of their growth they are inclined to run to flower on every point and if the buds are not required for market they should be removed, taking off along with the bud three or four of the topmost eyes, cutting them back just far enough to get a good strong eye. By continuing this practice up till within six weeks of the time the first crop is wanted, bushy plants with a wealth of luxuriant foliage, ready and fit to do good work, can be had. Ribes.

OUTDOOR ROSES.

For the past fifteen years I have been growing on an average of about 300 rose bushes. For the past two years I have abolished the hybrid perpetual and have gone to the tea and the hybrid tea.

In this climate (Iowa) I meet with varying success. Some years my crop of roses is very satisfactory, while others not so. I am familiar with and grow, the old, well known varieties, and keep posted with the new. Every year I add several dozens of new varieties to my rose garden. I fertilize them in the spring, or sometimes in the fall, covering with leaves and old boards and in this way carry my plants successfully over the winter. I have been growing them in black soil, to which was added some cow manure.

My roses this year all show weak growth, the outside leaves of the buds become withered and many buds remain hard and undeveloped. I attribute this to cool weather. I find many of the roses that I have planted this spring are the same. They fail to grow, but simply remain at a standstill during the entire season. I use good judgment in watering and give them constant attention. I do not know any other way than that I am now pursuing to force a vigorous growth of wood, hoping for a successful harvest of roses.

I had thought at times that the working in of rotted manure lightens the soil to such an extent as to interfere with the necessary working of the roots. Also that the soil may have become too much impregnated with the nutriment or chemicals received from the manure.

There are parties who recommend and others who condemn the application of bone meal to outdoor roses, claiming that the kind manufactured nowadays contains so much acid that it is harmful. I hope that some reader may have opportunity to briefly give me such information as might be useful and helpful in the successful growing of roses outdoors. The leaves on many of my plants are turning yellow. Others are spotted. I give them occasional doses of white hellebore, two tablespoons to a bucket of water. This seems to kill the green asphis, but I do not know whether it will affect a cure of the condition that causes the yellow leaves.

Should roses affected like mine, in order to promote growth, and during the summer, be treated to sprayings of water in the evening or let them become dried out and then soak them thoroughly, or should I keep the ground evenly moistened, not too wet or too dry, but about in the condition that growers keep their roses in the greenhouse? W. W. D.

VIOLETS.

Seasonable Work.

We are right in our trying hot weather for the violet stock and the grower who wants a nice, first-class house next winter must not relax his care now if he expects to have success. Unless care is taken these hot days the first thing you will know you will find that provoking little pest, the red spider, has gotten a foothold, with the result that the foliage is injured and this necessarily means reduced health to the plants. The better way is not to let them get started and if you have a good head to your water pressure and spray the foliage with care when watering the borders you ought not let them get ahead of you, as you can knock them off and drown them.

With us it is hot and close, which means that all the ventilation possible must be given the houses, and we have not had any heavy high winds that require a house to be closed against them, as we sometimes do, for if too strong and hot it whips and drys out the plants more than to have the house too warm for a few hours. Of course I only refer to having a house partially closed on one side, and this only while the wind lasts.

When the borders need watering take time and do it thoroughly. Don't dash a little over the top so that it looks wet at the time, but reduce the force so as not to wash out the plants and go along slowly and soak it down well, using care to avoid overwetting places that show that they have not properly dried out from previous waterings. Of course this is supposing that you have your borders well made with a proper amount of drainage and not too heavy soil. When you have completed the watering then go over the house again with a fine spray, cleaning the foliage of any dirt that may have accidentally lodged thereon, also for the spiders, as above mentioned. Don't forget to keep a lookout for aphis, sowbugs and all the other pests of the violet.

If you find any stunted or slow-growing plants remove them as fast as you find them and replace with the best of your reserve stock, so as to keep the borders even and up to the standard.

As of course you will want to attend the S. A. F. convention, don't wait until a few days before you want to start to get your violet house in order, as the weather may be such that you cannot do everything needful then, say nothing about the extra work, funeral designing, etc., that will turn up at the last moment to hinder you. Certainly you want them in good shape all the time, but have everything freshly done at least a week ahead of the time and keep it right there. R. E. SHUPHELT.

Panel and Shield.

SPACING VIOLETS.

How far apart should I plant my California violets in benching? How about air-slaked lime in the soil?

A. N.

You naturally have to use your own good judgment in spacing, depending somewhat on the size of the stock, but as the California is a rank, coarse grower, we would not advise planting closer than ten by twelve inches. We consider it advisable to use air-slaked lime in the soil and would again refer to my notes of a few weeks past, in which I spoke particularly of this. R. E. SHUPHELT.

PANEL AND SHIELD.

The accompanying illustration is a reproduction from a photograph taken at the establishment of the J. M. Gasser Company, of Cleveland. The panel and shield was made for the Philippine commission who were visiting in Cleveland and who made a trip to Canton to pay their respects to Mrs. McKinley and place this tribute on the tomb of President McKinley. The panel proper was five feet high and the illustration is so clear in detail as to show fully the excellent character of the work. The piece was made by Charles Russell, designer for the Gasser Company.

CARNATIONS

Depth of Soil on Benches.

It seems to be the consensus of opinion that the proper depth of soil to plant carnations in, on the benches, is about four inches after it has been watered and settled down, which means between four and one-half and five inches when first filled with loose soil. Occasionally you run across a fine bench of carnations that are growing in full six inches of soil and the success in these occasional cases often leads the grower to think that the extra two inches of soil caused it. It has been proven beyond any doubt that as fine carnations can be grown on four inches of soil as can be grown on a bench. All the extra soil that is hauled onto the benches is a waste of soil, time and money. The plants do not need more food in a season than can be incorporated in four inches of soil or can be added to good advantage while the plants are growing.

But occasionally a grower asks himself, why should it be just four inches? Why wouldn't three inches or two inches be enough? Most growers would shake their heads and give you many reasons why in their opinion three inches of soil is not enough and at the same time none of the reasons will really hold water. The question of food cannot cut any figure, because if you have to feed plants which are growing on four inches of soil you will merely have to feed those on three inches a little earlier and more regularly. They will, perhaps, dry out a trifle quicker, but those who oppose the semi-solid beds on that principle ought to be only too glad to adopt the shallower bench for the same reason. It is not too shallow to set the plants in properly; all you need to do is to spread the roots a little more. The very principle of bench culture proves that most plants do not need much depth of soil to thrive if plenty of water is given.

The above are the best reasons I have ever heard advanced, but really they won't pass, and after being blocked all around the average grower will give you as a final answer something like this: "Well, it does seem like you are right, but the best growers agree that four inches is the right depth and the best carnations in the world are grown on that depth of soil."

The truth of that cannot be denied, but we have come across a bench now and again which proved that as good carnations can be grown in three inches, or less, of soil, as can be grown on four inches. One case was a bench at R. Witterstaetter's place which I saw last January. It was a bench of Mrs. Lawson planted on two and one-half inches of soil and a finer bench of Lawson you could not wish to see. I do not know how that bench held up as the season advanced, but I imagine that would depend entirely on the feeding and mulching later on. We have noticed sometimes when refilling our beds here and there a space which had settled to about three inches but there had been no difference in the growth of the plants. About as fine a growth of hybrid rose wood for cuttings as I have ever seen was grown on less than three inches of soil.

When you refill your beds, try a small space (or more, if you care to), with about three inches of soil before it is settled and watch the results. Be prepared, however, if you see it is necessary, to give a little extra food or water later on, else it will not be a fair test.

Now comes the question of what advantage will there be in it? Will three inches be as good as four if we will have to water more and feed more? To those who have a farm of rich soil to draw from it will perhaps be cheaper, or as cheap, anyway, to handle the extra inch of soil, but think of what it means to the grower who has to pay from $1 upward per yard of good sod. For many growers, more especially those who have been gradually surrounded by the cities they are located in, the soil question is the hardest nut to crack. To use the same soil two years in succession does not seem to meet with much success and to haul sod three or four miles costs something, and really why should it be done if you can grow just as good stock with three-quarters as much of the material which is hardest to get. If you build your beds like we do with cinders in the bottom there will not be the rapid evaporation there is with the raised benches and one of the objections will be removed. The question of feeding will naturally adjust itself. When you see your plants need feeding you will feed them, whether it is January or March, always of course using due judgment in regard to weather, season, etc.

We intend to look into this matter more thoroughly the coming season, as we do not care to use four loads of soil if three loads will produce just as much stock of equal quality. I am not prepared to say that they will, but I am inclined to think that there will be little, if any difference. A. J. F. Baur.

CATTLEYA GIGAS.

Some Splendid Specimens.

Of the accompanying illustrations the larger shows a plant of Cattleya gigas flowering in a 12-inch basket and carrying sixty flowers. The picture, while very distinct, gives but a faint idea of the magnificent sight this plant presented when in full flower. It had fourteen new growths, all of which flowered, carrying from three to seven flowers each. The smaller illustration shows another plant carrying ten flowers on one single spike. It is impossible for the camera to catch each flower individually, but that they are all there can be abundantly vouched for. This constitutes, so far as is known to the writer, a record, eight flowers on one spike being the highest number hitherto known. These two wonderful specimens are growing in the collection of D. Willis James, at Madison, N. J., and are a tribute to the skill of William Duckham, his gardener. They are potted in American peat and if any of the leaf-mold adherents can show anything so good it will be a pleasure to hear from them. These plants are suspended from the roof, where they get an abundance of air all the time from the ventilators and where the full sun is permitted to shine on them in the fall and winter months. Many other plants of this species are showing almost as well and betoken by their luxuriance how well pleased they are with their quarters.

Cultural Notes.

Cattleya gigas, or, as botanists call it, C. Warscewiczii, needs somewhat different treatment to the average cattleya. It should always be grown suspended from the roof in a light, airy position. When grown on the bench many of the bulbs fail to sheath, though at times bulbs will produce flowers without having sheathed if well ripened before growth is finished. After flowering the plants should be kept drier and, if possible, cooler, to rest them down, the idea being to ripen the new bulbs and prevent them if possible from making a late summer growth. Where plants do break out again there is nothing to be done but keep them going till the last growth is finished. During the winter months give them the full sunlight, particularly after the eyes are breaking, so that the coming bulb will not be drawn or soft.

Commercially, this orchid is a profitable one to handle, it being the flower par excellence for the Newport season, providing it can be held back till July instead of flowering, as it often does, in May and June. There are many grand varieties of C. gigas, some of the Hardyana types being, to my mind, among the most gorgeous of the whole floral kingdom.

The photographs here reproduced were taken by A. Herrington, who is a very successful amateur in flower photography.

THE S. A. F. PROGRAM.

The preliminary program for the S. A. F. convention at St. Louis is in the hands of the printers and will shortly be ready for distribution to the members. The opening session will take place at 3 p. m. on Tuesday, August 16, and will be devoted to an address of welcome by the mayor of St. Louis, the annual address of the president and reports by the secretary, treasurer, state vice-presidents and standing committees. The judges will examine the novelties and new devices in the trade exhibition immediately after the opening session. The president's reception will be held on Tuesday evening.

On Wednesday the report of the judges will be followed by a paper by E. G. Hill, entitled "The Development of an American Type of Roses." An essay on "American Grown Bulbs" will also be read and J. C. Vaughan will discuss "The Ideal Employee." The next meeting place will be selected at this session, and officers nominated. The bowling contest takes place at 2 p. m., Wednesday afternoon.

At the Thursday morning session, J. A. Pettigrew will read an essay on "Home and Municipal Improvement from a Horticultural Standpoint" and J. A. Peterson will speak on "Indoor Blooming Plants." The election takes place Thursday forenoon and an amendment to the constitution will be acted upon, which, if adopted, will provide for the organization of "sections" of the society, the purpose being to encourage the affiliation with the society of the various separate trade organizations of the present.

The shooting contests will take place Thursday afternoon, also the meeting of the Hail Association. In the afternoon there will be a reception at Shaw's Garden and in the evening addresses by European tradesmen who are expected to be present.

Those who will attend should pay their dues at once. Those who paid their dues for 1903 should send $3 and all others should send $5 to the secretary, William J. Stewart, 11 Hamilton place, Boston.

CANADIAN FLORISTS.

The Canadian Horticultural Association will hold its seventh annual convention at Ottawa, Ont., August 9 and 10. The program includes an address by the mayor of Ottawa, a response by Jas. McKenna, the address of President Mepsted, a lecture by Prof. W. T. Macoun, a discussion on florists' fuel opened by C. Scrim, a paper entitled "Florists' Trade from the Retail Standpoint," by A. C. Wilshire; a paper entitled "Holiday Plants," by Wm. Gammage; a discussion on growing violets opened by Wm. Fendley and one on the advantages of iron construction. Plans are being made for a large trade display.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.—Frank Imbach has a set of seedling geraniums of which he is working up stock for distribution next spring.

RUTHERFORD, N. J.—Julius Roehrs has recently received an importation of eighty-two cases of Cattleya Gaskelliana. Thomas Knight is traveling in the west and south.

HAIL LOSSES.

The losses paid by the Florists' Hail Association since August 1 of last year aggregate $16,610.22 and are the heaviest in any single year in the history of the concern. But all losses have been met promptly without encroaching upon the reserve fund. Last August the Association had $11,000 reserve besides $13,000 cash on hand and this year's income has exceeded $12,000. Following is a complete list of the year's losses to June 26:

All sufficiently meritorious displays will receive a reward. The first will be a diploma, the next a bronze medal, the next a silver medal and the highest a gold medal.

Suitable vases will be furnished by the exposition management and exhibits will be properly staged where exhibitors do not personally attend.

Judges will be chosen from the most eminent specialists for the respective displays.

All exhibits must be correctly and legibly labeled.

Exhibits must be prepaid to the exposition grounds.

The superintendent will be empowered to remove any exhibit that is no longer attractive.

A business card not to exceed 9x6 inches may be displayed with each exhibit.

Any person who wishes to make a special display of any kind of cut flowers at any time may do so, rules and regulations being adhered to. Full schedule of flower shows will be furnished prospective exhibitors on requisition to Chief, Department of Horticulture.

The Market.

Lessened supplies and light demand have characterized the market during the past week. Some growers are now bringing in very little, concentrating their energies on preparations for housing carnations and other necessary work. Roses are seldom seen of good quality. Carnations of the best quality are still weak, fair stock selling up to $2 per 100. Some Fair Maids and Enchantress are still very good. Sweet peas are abundant at from 10 cents to 40 cents per 100, according to quality. Popular varieties seem to be Mont Blanc, Blanche Ferry, Countess of Radnor, Lady Grisel Hamilton, Prima Donna and Mrs. Sankey. Lily of the valley continues to have a fairly good sale. A few outdoor gladioli have appeared. Among hardy herbaceous perennials that useful variety Achillea Ptarmica The Pearl is also seen. Some indoor asters are seen. There are promises of an abundant outdoor supply a little later.

The Exhibition.

The first of the free weekly exhibitions of the present summer was held at Horticultural Hall on July 9. There was a splendid show, although there were only a few competitive classes. The lecture hall and loggia were crowded with exhibits. On account of the excellence of the exhibition, the committee of arrangements wisely decided to keep the show open until Sunday night instead of closing it at 4 p. m. on Saturday.

For best display of hardy roses filling fifty bottles, in twelve varieties, W. J. Clemson, Oscar Kristenson, gardener, and Miss Sarah B. Fay, M. H. Walsh, gardener, made fine exhibits. For twenty-five vases of Iris Kaempferi, W. Whitman, M. Sullivan, gardener, beat Mrs. J. L. Gardner, W. Thatcher, gardener. Each had a beautiful table. Mr. Sullivan also won for display of Campanula medium. There was a keen contest for thirty vases of delphiniums, three spikes in each. William Postings, gardener to Mrs. Winthrop Chambers, W. Whitman, and Mrs. J. L. Gardner won in order named.

The class for herbaceous flowers and grasses brought out a strong entry for thirty varieties. W. Hunnewell, T. D. Hatfield, gardener, was first, followed by W. J. Clemson and the Bay State Nurseries. Much the best collection from Carl Blomberg was disqualified, as it contained no grasses. The reading of the schedule seemed to indicate that grasses were necessary rather than permissible, which was intended.

From Blue Hill Nurseries, Julius Huerlin, proprietor, came a grand collection of 106 varieties of herbaceous plants. Another extensive and very meritorious lot were shown by Harvard Botanical Gardens, Robert Cameron, gardener. The following herbaceous plants shown are especially good for florists: Spiræa Chinensis and S. lobata, Galium boreale, Hemerocallis Thunbergi, Phlox Miss Ligard, Heuchera sanguinea, Alstroemeria, aurantiaca, Malva moschata alba, Delphinium Chinensis and D. hybridium, Gypsophila paniculata, Cimicifuga racemosa, Campanula urticifolia fl. pl., Coreopsis grandiflora, Lilium superbum, L. excelsum, L. Browni and L. candidum.

M. H. Walsh showed tables of cut sprays of his seedling ramblers, Carissina and Lady Gay, which were much admired. R. J. Farquhar & Co. had branches of the Farquhar rose and numerous choice Japanese irises. Peter Cairns had a collection of roses and Japanese irises. W. N. Craig made a display of sweet peas, including some of the newest sorts. There were miscellaneous collections from Geo. Hollis, E. M. Gill, J. B. Shurtleff and others. James E. Rothwell, Emil Johansson, gardener, received honorable mention for two new seedling cypripediums, one named Mrs. J. E. Rothwell being promising.

Various Notes.

Members of the flower and plant committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society and other friends paid a visit to the Tailby establishment at Wellesley on July 12 to see a field of Mr. Tailby's new hybrid callas in bloom.

Suitable quarters have not yet been secured for the new independent flower market. It is hoped the location will be found shortly. Anything we have written in this column in regard to the new flower market has been received from very reliable sources. Mr. Ward will understand that we never questioned the general standing of his confreres in this new movement. We have no personal feelings in the matter whatever and assure him that fair and courteous treatment will always be given every one.

W. W. Tailby, son of Joseph Tailby, the veteran carnationist of Wellesley, was married on June 29 to Miss Mary F. Davis, of Somerville. Mr. Tailby's many friends extend congratulations.

Peter Fisher continues to send in very fine blooms of carnations Mrs. M. A. Patten and Nelson Fisher; these are evidently good summer varieties.

J. Whidden, for some years gardener to E. W. Gilmore, of North Easton, died on July 11 from Bright's disease, with which he had been a sufferer for some years.

William Sim, of Cliftondale, well known as a producer of violets and sweet peas, has a superb house of tomatoes just now worthy of a long journey to see.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Shipments continue from the grower in volume far in advance of other years but the outlet seems to be dammed up somewhere and the "backwater" floods the ice boxes of wholesalers. Even the last resort is no longer in evidence, the street merchants' brigade. Not an ancient Greek or a son of sunny Italy can be found on any street of the metropolis. They have all flown to Coney Island and other seaside resorts and are dispensing fruit and hot corn and it will be September before they can be depended on to take up the "white man's burden" again.

Rose shipments are abundant and carnations also. The quality is quite as good as can be expected. This will be a year of no shortage in any line, judging by present indications. Lilies continue to arrive as though they had become perennial and prices are hardly one-third of their accustomed value. Gladioli, too, are already in excess of expectations. What will be the verdict when the great growers of the east overwhelm the market? All outdoor stock is abundant. No definite conclusion as to actual sales can be determined by quotations of prices. Those given indicate about what are paid for necessities. The "closing out at any price" values are unmentionable.

In nearly all the wholesale establishments the curtains drop at 4 p. m. Floriculturally after that hour Twenty-eighth street is dead. Many of the stores on Twenty-ninth and Thirtieth also close early and doubtless soon the custom will be almost universal.

Many of the flower merchants, especially in the wholesale department, are philosophers and take what comes as a matter of course, and are unruffled. It will be only a few weeks more and the clouds will lift and another strenuous and prosperous season will be in full blast. In the meantime the coming convention will absorb general interest.

Various Notes.

The holiday fever is raging. Employer and employe are taking advantage of the opportunity and making the "hot time" of restful value. Stumpp's employes and their friends to the number of about 100 enjoyed their annual excursion last week, many of the wholesale contingent being there. The grove was at Eckstein's, on Staten Island, and the bowling prizes were secured by outside talent. Jos. Fenrich won the first prize, a $20 stein; W. Siebrecht, second, a $15 stein, and P. Smith, of Raynor's, the third, a $5 silk umbrella. All kinds of athletic sports were enjoyed and the affair was a financial success. Strange to say, with so many ladies' men in attendance, no ladies were there. President Traendly graced the occasion with his presence.

J. K. Allen arrived safely at Liverpool June 29.

John Kral, with Moore, Hentz & Nash, has been laid on the shelf for a week with a sprained ankle.

Arthur Wise, of Ghormley's, is enjoying a two weeks' outing, and James Coyle, of the same establishment, leaves on July 18 for St. Louis, Cincinnati and Kentucky, to be away until August.

Mr. and Mrs. Ferdinand Mangold, of Irvington, celebrated their golden wedding Saturday evening at Lyndhurst, the country seat of Helen Gould, where Mr. Mangold has been superintendent for forty years. July 9 was also the anniversary of his birth, which occurred 76 years ago at Carlsruhe, in the Grand Dutchy of Baden. There he began his horticultural life in the famous Botanical Gardens at the age of 14, part of the nine years spent there being in the employ of King Leopold. At the golden wedding a large number of friends and relatives were present and many valuable gifts were sent, the best prized being $100 in gold and a gold clock from Miss Gould and a gold loving cup from the employes.

Young & Nugent show daily a splendid stock of cattleyas of all the best varieties.

A brief call at Tarrytown on Saturday found the F. R. Pierson Co. still overwhelmed with work, the shipping season having lasted far beyond expectations. The new Piersoni will be given an opportunity to show its beauty at the convention. The past has been the greatest year in this well known firm's experience.

E. G. Asmus' Son is the new title of the rose factory in West Hoboken, formerly known as E. G. Asmus & Son, made famous through the dissemination of the Liberty rose.

The annual painting and enlarging of the wholesale emporiums is now in order. Charles Millang has rented his upper floor, enlarged his cut flower department and looks spick and span in a white enamel front.

Bowling has been laid on the shelf for a couple of weeks, owing to the extreme heat and the absence from the city of some of the leading members. The club feels confident of a fair representation at St. Louis and a team that will about equal the record of Chicago, St. Louis or Philadelphia.

Ralph M. Ward writes that business in Europe in his line is very good. He is en route to Vienna, Rome, Naples, Genoa, Marseilles and Paris and will shortly sail for home.

J. McManus is handling some fine Doweana and gigas cattleyas and has often a dozen fine varieties of orchids on hand to pick from.

William Ford, of Ford Bros., has fully recovered from his week's illness, his especial regret being missing the outing. He had everything cut and dried for the fat men's race, running at 225 pounds. With the Sterling Fishing Club he will shortly enjoy his annual holiday at Barnegat Bay.

Mr. Trumpour, of Small's, who made such a brave fight for first honors in the mile race, won last year the arm chair given to the best runner over 45. He made a lot of the youngsters quit this year also.

Clarence Saltford, who sprained his ankle in the ball game, is still on crutches at Rhinebeck.

Frank Frank, the retail florist of Eighty-seventh street and Third avenue, and Joseph J. Levy, will begin their holiday with two weeks fishing at Lake Huntingdon, Sullivan county, on July 25.

William H. Donohue and William Hanft, lieutenants of Thomas Young, Jr., are away for a month's vacation.

It is asserted that the manager for a prominent wholesaler on Twenty-eighth street will lead a handsome young lady to the nuptial altar on July 16.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Business is flat and unprofitable this week, the beginning of summer, as one of the retailers put it. Let us hope that a summer commencing in the middle of July will be short. The weather has been cool, good for root action and for health, as shown by the small number of funeral orders. The quality of flowers is fair for the season, the outdoor stock giving needed variety. In roses, Beauties and Kaiserins lead, with some nice Liberties, and those fine Westerly Bridesmaids of S. S. Pennock's. The same Rhode Island town also sends fine blooms of Carnation Lillian Pond to the above named wholesaler. This, with Prosperity, Flora Hill and Mrs. Lawson, are best now. Valley continues to come in steadily in good form. Leo Niessen has L. auratum and L. Harrisii. Asters have come; Edgar & Co. have a purple variety. There is plenty of smilax. Sweet peas are declining, both in quantity and quality.

A Solarium.

After a season such as the one just closed, one does not naturally expect much building, so the cheerful smile and ready response of D. T. Connor, who so ably represents the Lord & Burnham Co. here, to the question of "anything new?" was a pleasant surprise. This firm has furnished material for a house 30x150 for J. Rutter Hess, of Gap, Pa.; one house 37x110 for Fred Ritchie, Lancaster, Pa.; one house 20x60 for William Gibbons, and a sun parlor at Dr. Kirkbride's asylum for the insane at Forty-fifth and Market streets, West Philadelphia. This sun parlor or solarium, as it is called, will be quite unique. It will be 35x50 feet, entirely covered with glass and built in the most substantial manner. 'It will be fitted up handsomely inside, with tables, chairs, rugs, plants, books, magazines and writing materials. It is the gift of two sons who present it to the institution in loving memory of their mother, who spent some years of her life there. The work is expected to be finished in September.

Roses.

Referring to the letter of "Ribes" in your issue of last week, the July planted houses of Beauties to which I referred did yeoman service from Thanksgiving until Lent. The firm which grew them is among the largest and most successful of Philadelphia's Beauty growers. The eastern rose growers heartily welcome "Ribes" and are glad he has become one of us.

Various Notes.

George G. Fleming and William H. Patton, at the Rittenhouse nurseries, have succeeded M. F. La Roche at Collingdale, Pa. They expect to grow cut flowers for the wholesale market and to do landscape gardening.

M. Rice & Co. received 160 cases by one steamer last Saturday. They are working overtime to keep pace with the heavy imports.

Leo Niessen continues to receive fine new crop Beauties from Carl Jurgens, of Newport, R. I.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. expect between 200 and 300 cases of florists' supplies this week. Samples of this stock for the coming season will be shown at St.

Louis next month; some good things are promised.

Robert Scott & Son are sending in new crop Beauties to S. S. Pennock.

W. S. Peterson, of Cincinnati, who has been in this city for some months, has happily recovered from an attack of appendicitis and is out of the hospital.

The Philadelphia Carnation Co. has 55,000 carnations planted out at Secane which are growing nicely.

A chat with President Westcott and Vice-president Rust of the Florists' Club elicited the information that the club would probably leave for St. Louis on Sunday, August 14, over the Pennsylvania railroad. The round trip ticket will cost $24.75.

Amos Bernard is building three houses, each 20x100, at Kennett Square, Pa.

A. M. Campbell, with Edward Reid, says that shipping business keeps up well; lots of paper in winter keeps out cold and in summer keeps it in.

Summer is here in earnest. Some of the smaller retail stores have closed, while the larger ones have only a small force on.

Charles P. Poryzees has the first cosmos, pink and white, seen this season in an effectively arranged window.

John McIntyre is away on his vacation.

Frank Lovett, of Whelen's, at Newtown, continues to bring in plenty of stuff.

William Muth, with C. F. Edgar & Co., has just returned from his vacation.

PHIL.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Receipts have been reduced materially since the last report and the market is no longer encumbered with the oversupply which has been such a problem to the wholesalers for the past couple of months. Replanting roses has resulted in reducing supplies to a mere fraction of what they were a month ago. The quality on the whole is up to the usual summer average but there are still too many of the low grade. There are only a few Beauties available but plenty of Liberty and Meteor. There are also enough good Brides and Bridesmaids at hand to meet the very light shipping demand, for local trade is confined principally to funeral work. Prices are a little better than last week.

The growers are also beginning to throw out the carnations preparatory to replanting and this has had its effect in reducing the surplus. But there are still more carnations than the market requires and prices are very low.

The oversupply of sweet peas is still very largely in evidence. The glut of Easter lilies gave place to an unwieldy stock of candidums, which have in turn been succeeded by the auratum, which is now coming in in good quantities but maintaining prices fairly well. Gladioli are practically out of the market for the time being. There are still plenty of peonies. Besides stock from cold storage, fresh stock is still coming from northern Michigan. The peony season is likely to last till August this year. Shasta daisies and coreopsis have been in favor and occasionally are hard to find in the market. There is plenty of most outdoor stock.

Various Notes.

D. W. Brant has leased the interest of L. M. Noe in the firm of Brant & Noe, at Forest Glen. Mr. Brant has been the western representative of the firm ever since it was established, Mr. Noe having large interests at Madison, N. J., and in New York. Mr. Brant will continue the business exactly as heretofore. He is tearing down one house and a portion of another and will rebuild as one first-class structure 38x185. The planting of carnations will be largely increased for next season.

A. Kennicott says that his supply of peonies will hold out all this week and possibly well into next. He says the peony season all along has been about three weeks later than the average year and prices have shown the effect. He says that the last thousand dozens this year will not be worth to him over $300, where last year the last thousand dozens brought more than $700. He is not, however, looking for old-time prices in the future, believing that the supplies have become too large to permit of it.

It is reported that N. K. Welter, at Evanston, will abandon carnation growing and give his space to lettuce and cucumbers. John Evert, of Rogers Park, will do the same thing and there are others who have the same step in view. But several of them are thinking that it is a good deal cheaper to make a start at lettuce than it will be to stock up with carnations again if the lettuce doesn't do so well next year.

Geo. Reinberg has decided to drop Perle from his list of roses. He is one of the few growers who have had this rose this year. There is very little call for it in this market.

E. C. Amling has returned from a week's fishing trip. A. C. Kohlbrand will leave Saturday night for northern Wisconsin to spend two weeks with the muskallonge.

Bassett & Washburn report that they are now completely sold out of rose plants. In general rose stock has not been in its usual demand this season, but this firm has had a very satisfactory business on grafted plants. Mr. Washburn is in the Wisconsin woods for a couple of weeks.

E. H. Hunt is adding considerably to his space by double-decking a considerable part of the store. The office will hereafter be on the upper floor.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Winterson are at home from their wedding trip. It is reported that another member of the Winterson firm is shortly to take unto himself a wife.

There is every prospect of a good sale at the Fuchs auction today. A considerable part of the stock has already been sold, the Wittbold's buying all the rubber plants.

Klehm's nursery is sending Kennicott Bros. Co. a great variety of outdoor flowers which are useful for window decorations.

A. L. Vaughan and family have returned from Louisiana, where they have spent six months.

C. W. Ernie has been spending a few days at Terre Haute.

On Tuesday evening the scrubs beat the convention team in one game. The ladies now have a tournament of their own, the Winterson Co. having offered two handsome prizes for a series of twelve games. Tuesday evening Mrs. Kreitling rolled 164.

Among the week's visitors have been George A. Heinl, of Toledo, and his brother, John G. Heinl, of Terre Haute; Joseph Bock, of Burlington, Ia.; W. A. Kennedy, Milwaukee; Joseph Labo and Sigurd Biseth, of Joliet; A. L. Glaser, Dubuque, Iowa.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

We are now having what you might call our first real summer weather. The temperature rises very near to 90 degrees every day. It is needless to say what effect this is having upon stock in the greenhouses. It is what we have to expect, though and we ought to be thankful that stock held out as long as it did this year. There is a good demand at present, due largely to the many funeral orders, and the supply is not equal to it by a good deal. All of the wholesale houses are early cleaned out of whatever stock they have that was salable and their ice boxes are empty. Especially is this true of carnations, which have suffered most from the heat of the last few days. Even those from the north are rapidly deteriorating in quality. There are not nearly enough to take care of the demand at present.

Roses are very much in the same state, but some few growers have managed to make their cuts hold out in very fair shape. Some very nice Kaiserins are to be had in limited numbers, also Liberty. Some Beauties come in now and then that are fine for so late in the season. Other varieties of roses are in most cases awfully poor. There is a good lot of outdoor white stock that has sold out quickly. A few lilies find a ready market, also some gladioli. Sweet peas are still in oversupply.

Various Notes.

Trimble McCullough, son of J. Chas McCullough, the seedsman, sailed on steamer Victoria from Seattle, Wash., July 2 on a pleasure trip through Alaska, stopping at Sitka and Nome and possibly continuing his trip through Siberian waters. He expects to be gone two or three months, in company with A. J. Trimble, a director of the steamship company.

The picnic committee is putting forth its best efforts to make this year's outing a great success. D. Rusconi, one of the committee, has already disposed of over eighty tickets and I hear that others are not far behind. All that is necessary now is a fine day. The date is Thursday, July 21, the place, Coney Island.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society was held last Saturday evening, newly elected President Ben George in the chair. The rapidly approaching meeting of the S. A. F. was discussed and a committee consisting of E. G. Gillett and J. W. Rodgers was appointed by the chair to look after transportation. From present indications there will be quite a crowd from this city.

Wm. Rodgers is about to install a new boiler. It will be considerably larger than the old one and capable of taking good care of his plant with the newly added glass.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business since the Fourth has been very slow among the retailers. The weather has not been any too good during the week just past, almost every day heavy showers, which made the nights cold. The democratic convention did not bring the expected increase in trade, though some of the down-town florists had quite a few orders at the different hotels where headquarters were established. From now on the retailers will be buying lightly and Boston ferns and palms are the only window displays seen.

At the wholesale houses plenty of stock is to be had, but not of the first quality, especially so in roses and carnations. Of the roses, American Beauties are none too good, color very pale, but the best sell for $2 per dozen, shorts from $4 to $6 per 100. In smaller roses, Ivory looks the best for white, at $6 per 100 for choice. Maids, too, are off color now. Liberty and Meteor are plentiful and so are Bride, Golden Gate and Kaiserin. These range in price from $3 to $5 per 100. Some extra fine valley is to be had at $2.50 per 100.

Carnations are very small and fancy stock is hard to get. Colored stock is very poor, white being much better. The Lawsons that come in are especially of poor quality. The average price is $1.50 per 100, but a few extras bring $2.

The biggest overstock in the market is sweet peas. These are sold very cheap in big lots and they come in by the thousands. A few good asters are in but not enough to go around. Outdoor stock is very plentiful.

Various Notes.

The growers are still busy benching chrysanthemums and replanting rose houses. They report that the rainy weather has interfered greatly with their outdoor work. Quite a lot of building is going on in Kirkwood, Webster Grove, Old Orchard and in the southern part of the city and all want to be through with their work by convention time.

William F. Kasting, who has been with us all of the last week attending the democratic convention, left Saturday night for Chicago. While here he visited some of his old friends whom he knew twelve years ago when "Billy" worked for The Jordan Floral Company. He also visited the World's Fair and the Pike. He claims he had better luck than his Chicago friends, Phil Hauswirth and George Asmus, who were here a week previous. Mr. Kasting predicts a great convention next month and says that Buffalo will be on hand as big as ever. The Kasting cup, which he will present to the Florists' Bowling Association, will be the finest ever competed for by the florists' bowling teams.

A. L. Vaughan, wife and daughter spent Friday in St. Louis at the exposition. Mr. Vaughan had a few moments to spare to call on friends. They were on their way back to Chicago to live, after spending six months in the south.

Paul Neuman, who has charge of the Holy Name cemetery at Buffalo, is taking in the fair and visiting the different cemeteries about the city.

A. Berdan is sending to this market the very best of lily of the valley, which is handled by Frank Ellis. The other Kirkwood florists are sending in thousands of sweet peas. Those of Pilcher, the Udes, Gross and Winter are very fine. John Connon, of Webster Grove, is also sending in some good carnations and sweet peas.

Superintendent Kuehn reports that a great deal of space is taken for the trade display and as the convention is only five weeks away those who contemplate making an exhibit should make application for space at once, so as not to delay matters at the last moment. The souvenir book is now in the hands of the printer and will be ready for distribution by August 1. This will be one of the handsomest books ever gotten out. Messrs. Koenig, Ammann, Weber, Beyer, Tesson and Ostertag, the other chairmen of committees, are all hard at work to make the convention a grand success.

At the World's Fair the horticultural features are now at their best. The floral clock is attracting great crowds of people daily. There are plants of new varieties of cannas to be seen, also everything that is new in the plant line. As to heat, we have it as cool as any city during the month of August. Come next month and be convinced.

Team No. 1 was badly beaten Monday night, principally through the grand bowling of Charles Kuehn, he averaging 211 per game.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

We are all getting ready and cleaning up for next season's business. Business is very quiet at the present time. Good cut flowers of all kinds are scarce. Peckham is cutting some fine gladioli and sweet peas. All the florists report the best season on bedding plants they ever had. W. G. Kroeber is busy building his new greenhouse.

The Florists' Club is to have an outing on Friday, July 22, and a great time is expected. It was voted to invite the florists who are not members to join the party and help to make the outing a great success. This is the club's first attempt to have an outing, and we all hope to make it a really good time. Friends of the club have put up a purse of $25 for a baseball game between the store men and greenhouse men. E. H. Chamberlain is manager and captain of the store team, and Edw. Blum of the greenhouse team. The greenhouse men say they are going to put the store team out of business to square themselves for the knocks they have had to take the past season for the poor stuff they have brought in for the store men to sell. There is also to be a fat men's race for a box of cigars, and a hurdle race between the clerks of W. P. Peirce and E. H. Chamberlain. A. B. Hathaway has challenged any of the members to climb a greased pole, but as yet no one has accepted.

Seed Trade News.

L. W. Bowen, of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, is in Europe.

At Louisville the onion sets are about made. The dry weather has shortened the crop considerably.

Visited Chicago.—W. C. Langbridge, representing J. B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y.

In Michigan, the bean fields are looking well. The stand is good and the outlook promises an average crop if good weather continues.

W. B. Longstreth, Gratiot, O., grows the onion sets to supply his local trade and reports the crop looking well July 9, the season generally cool, and wet.

Good rains in the sections of Michigan where radish seed is growing have helped to push the plants along. The outlook is now more favorable for a crop.

"The yield of cucumbers from acreage under contract to picklers will be heavy if the weather is favorable, as a large acreage was planted," says a western pickler.

In Wisconsin early peas have blossomed and are beginning to set pods. Present conditions point to a fair harvest of Alaskas and extra earlies. The dwarf wrinkled sorts are not so promising.

Jamestown, N. Y.—The Walter Mott Seed and Bulb Co. reports local trade, embracing the territory within a radius of twenty-five miles, as very satisfactory, considerably in advance of last year, in spite of a poor season, late spring and wet weather.

The cucumber crop seems to be doing well thus far. The plants are backward but appear healthy. From the present outlook, it all depends upon the weather from now on, as the stand at this date is about as good as it could be under the circumstances.

At Chicago the onion set crop looks well in some fields; in others the thin stand, owing to rough ground at seeding time, will cut down the quantity that should be harvested. The later plantings, which it was thought might come along properly, still show lack of seasonable growth and will hardly mature more than half a crop.

In some gardening sections this year complaint is made that head lettuce runs to seed instead of making a head. A check in the growth of the plant is responsible for this. Changeable weather, one day hot, the next cold, will sometimes cause it. Drouth followed by wet will do the same. Beet and many other crops will run to seed under the same conditions. The present season has been unusually hard upon the growing plants and it is likely that things of this kind will occur. Gardeners who have been at the business for a number of years understand this from experience, and it is not an unusual occurrence.

Visited Indianapolis.—S. F. Leonard, Chicago.

Crops of one or two important lettuce varieties are reported failures by a California grower.

Musk melons, squashes and pumpkins are not doing well, and a short seed crop is in prospect.

California reports that the onion seed crop is likely to be much shorter than former advices indicated.

CATALOGUES WITHOUT STAMPS.

There is much interest among seedsmen and nurserymen in the matter of mailing catalogues in bulk, without stamps affixed, prepayment being by cash. A. A. Berry, of Clarinda, Ia., took the matter up with his postmaster and he in turn with the Department at Washington. The correspondence is self-explanatory. The first letter is to the Review from Mr. Berry, as follows:

We herewith enclose a letter to our postmaster, from the authorities at Washington, in regard to a matter that the seedsmen have been patiently working on for years to bring to pass. You can see that it is now a reality. At the recent meeting, held at St. Louis, the matter was up before them and nothing definite was known and we believe as yet the facts are not known. This will be quite a boon for all mail order houses and especially seed houses, as the affixing of stamps is quite a task when from 100,000 to 200,000 catalogues are sent out; besides it saves the risk of handling postage stamps, as there is always more or less loss in affixing them. So you will see it is quite an advantage for this ruling to be in use indeed.

The following is the reply of Mr. Madden, third assistant postmaster general, dated June 25, to the inquiry of the postmaster at Clarinda, Ia.:

I am in receipt of your communication of the 15th instant, in relation to the provision of the Act of April 28, 1904, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department, etc., under which not less than 2,000 identical pieces of third and fourth-class matter may be accepted, upon payment of the proper amount of postage and under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe, for transmission in the mails without postage stamps affixed.

The Department will formulate the necessary regulations, which will be made effective as soon as practicable, and will be given publicity through the press and otherwise.

It having been reported at the Seed Trade convention that a ruling had been issued to cover the operation of the law, the Review on July 1 applied to F. E. Coyne, postmaster at Chicago, for a copy of the regulations. His reply, under date of July 5, was as follows:

Replying to your communication of the 1st instant, I beg to state that the department has not issued any orders which provide for the mailing of catalogues in bulk without stamps affixed.

BRITISH TRADE LAWS.

In the British House of Commons inquiry was made as to the advisability of some amendment in or addition to the law as it now stood for the better protection of agriculturists and honest seed merchants. The following reply was received from Mr. Fellowes: "A case in which certain foreign seed was sold as English clover was recently brought under the notice of the board. Proceedings were instituted under the merchandise marks act, and the vender was fined £10, with 6s. court fees and £21 towards the cost of the prosecution. This result goes to confirm the conclusion arrived at by the departmental committee of 1900, who expressed the opinion that there was no practical difficulty under the existing law in the way of obtaining thoroughly good and reliable seeds by those who know how to set about it; but we shall be very happy to give full consideration to any representations or suggestions which may be made to us on the subject."

PUEBLO, COLO.

The greenhouse owners are beginning to recover from the terrible hailstorm of last May. All of them have bought glass to reglaze the houses. G. Fleischer was the heaviest loser. He is short on flowers for his retail store. He has men cleaning out broken glass, tons of it. He will rebuild some of his houses, as the wood was pretty well rotted out.

Charley Wallace has bought out his partner, D. M. McMurray, and will go it alone. Mr. McMurray has rented the Harry Baker greenhouses and will probably grow flowers. They have been used for vegetables.

The J. J. Thomas plant has cleaned up the several tons of broken glass and is putting on the new glass and growing a crop of cucumbers. They were badly damaged by the hail but will turn off nearly half crop. The Thomas houses grow vegetables exclusively.

E. G. Donnelly has bought glass and will begin repairs at once. So will C. O. Zimmerman.

The Florists' Hail Association was hit pretty hard but responded in fine shape and at once. The association stands high in this neck of the woods.

A wonderful downpour of rain today makes outdoor stuff look fine.

Pittsburg, Pa.—Fire did a couple of hundred dollars' damage in the store of Randolph & McClements July 5.

Jacksonville, Ill.—Joseph Heinl & Sons has been incorporated. The capital stock is $20,000 and the incorporators are Joseph Heinl, Harry Heinl and William Heinl.

Montpelier, Vt.—Alex Emslie has made an arrangement with F. P. Carleton, the well-known sweet pea grower, by which he will handle his entire cut of sweet peas for the season.

Rockville, Ind.—D. A. Graham has sold out his business here to Howard Brubeck and has removed to Joplin, Mo., where he will start in business with two modern greenhouses.

Indianapolis, Ind.—F. A. Conway & Co. have brought suit against Cook & Schmidt, brick manufacturers, in Justice Smock's court for damages they claim has been done to their stock by dust from the bricks. Conway & Co. ask $50.00 damages.

Anoka, Minn.—Trade is again quite good, after two weeks very dull. Benching is well under way at the Pratt-Ford greenhouses. They had fine success with Lawson, Enchantress and Prosperity indoors last summer, and are growing more that way this season. H. E. Philpott, of Winnipeg, was a caller here both going to and returning from the St. Louis Fair.

NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Business has settled down to the usual summer conditions, trade being chiefly confined to funeral work. Roses are far below the average but carnations are good for this part of the season and will be less plentiful each week, as the growers are starting to empty their houses of plants and soil. The hard work has started for the growers. While the retailers are at the shores trying to get a nice tan on their bodies, the growers are getting their tan under glass.

The month of June has been a record breaker as far as cut flowers and late bedding plants are concerned. Never before in this city were there so many sweet peas sold during the month of June. Six or seven years ago there was only one grower who raised sweet peas to bloom during the spring months, but each year has seen one or two more growing them until this year they are grown by every one whose houses allow head room enough for the vines. The demand has been unusually good and each grower has sold them to advantage.

A few asters and some dahlias are seen now and then but the salvation of the retailer is the sweet pea during the summer months. S. H. W.

BOILER AND PIPING.

What size boiler do we require to heat three houses 18x70 feet, the temperature ranging from 35 to 50 degrees or more? The houses have glass gables in one end and are built east and west. Would a boiler eight feet long, three feet in diameter and containing twenty-two 3-inch flues heat the buildings? What would be the horse-power of such a boiler? What size of flow pipe would it be advisable to use? We were intending to use a 2-inch flow with 1-inch returns, the houses being heated by steam.

K. & M.

The three greenhouses in question would each need, to maintain a temperature of 50 degrees during severe weather, a 2-inch riser under the ridge and twelve 1-inch returns running the full length of the houses. These houses require about 1,000 feet of radiation to maintain 50 degrees with steam under five pounds pressure. To supply this a boiler with about 130 feet of heating surface would be needed. The boiler in question, which is eight feet long, three feet in diameter, with twenty-two 3-inch tubes, if set to work, as a return tubular, would give about 200 feet of heating surface, which would provide a good safe limit of capacity for the houses in question. L. C. C.

"THE REVIEW has been a welcome visitor the past year; it is very instructive. just what every florist ought to have."—S. M. WYATT, Watseka, Ill.

I LIKE the REVIEW and would not be without it. The only reason I did not advertise in it this season was that local trade took all the stock; did not have enough and had to buy through the advertisements in the REVIEW; that's where to look for what you want.—J. A. KENISTON, Newburyport, Mass.

Vegetable Forcing.

LAST year a very destructive epidemic due to the fungus called Cercospora melonis inflicted a loss of over $100,000 on the cucumber growers in the south of England.

INDOOR GRAPE CULTURE.

I read with much interest, first, the notes on this subject by Mr. Croydon and then those by Mr. Scott and, as I have been in a position to study this subject at close range, perhaps a few remarks may be of interest.

The chief question is, can grape growing be made to pay in this country? A year or two ago I would say yes, but today I am more pessimistic as to the results. Mr. Scott speaks of a Belgian grower whose grapes netted him $2 a pound in the New York market. I doubt, if that same grower is shipping to New York today, whether he nets one-fourth of that sum. It seems to me that the growers of Europe are using the New York market as a dumping ground. By shipping large quantities over here they are enabled to relieve the congestion in their own market, and as the cost of transportation is practically nothing, they, owing to the cheapness of production can sell cheaply and still stand to make a small profit. The commission dealer in New York does not seem to care for the home-grown grapes so long as the imported article is in the market. It is discouraging to a man with perhaps a ton of grapes hanging on his vines to be able to sell only thirty or forty pounds in a week, and on top of this have the dealer send word that no more should be sent until he calls for them. In my humble opinion a market has to be created before grape culture here will become profitable, and some one stand to lose money in creating that market. The retailer at the present time seems to want at least 150 to 200 per cent profit and the result is that while the price to the grower is painfully low, the cost to the consumer is painfully high, and this high cost means naturally that consumption is curtailed.

Mr. Scott's statement that where one pound could be sold thirty years ago 500 pounds could be sold today, is not borne out by the facts. I do not think we can ever see the miles of graperies here as they are in Europe, because the cheap native grape seems good enough for the great majority of our people and until the public is educated to the taste of the indoor grape (which education, as I have previously intimated, would cost money) the Muscats and Colmars will simply be used only by the very wealthy.

The difference in the cost of production here and in Europe makes all the difference between profit and loss. Friend Scott says, in speaking of the tedious work of thinning the fruit, that "very cheap help could be taught that." The question is, where is the cheap help? Even an unskilled laborer who cannot speak English asks and receives in this section $1.50 per day. Most of the thinning in England is done by girls and women, who do not make more than that in a week. I fear our American women would not take up the job at any price. With the present price of glass and other building requisites, not to mention the mechanic's wage, we cannot begin to put up houses as cheaply as they do on "the other side." The price we have to pay in wages to our skilled growers to look after the crop is more than double and on every hand we are confronted by higher cost of production.

To offset this we have a duty of only about 5 cents a pound, I believe. Mr. Scott says "so much the better if they came in free." Since they are eaten only by the rich, why would not a duty of 100 per cent ad valorem be a good thing? Then when the American grower got his houses going and began to show signs of being a bloated plutocrat it would be a good time to cut down the duty and chasten his spirit.

It is easy to talk about our improved methods and machinery putting us on a par with other countries, but is it always true? Why is it, for instance, that while we have land here to give away the European farmer ships thousands of bushels of potatoes to the eastern ports, pays a duty of 25 cents a bushel and competes with the market grower on Long Island? The European farmer pays three or four times as much rent for his land and yet, even with that handicap, he must produce his product more cheaply or he could not compete.

Friend Scott refers to Mr. Herrington and Mr. Duckham in his remarks. Mr. Duckham does not grow for market but as I had the good fortune to be foreman for Mr. Herrington for some years I know fairly well how the crops fared with him. In those graperies 100 feet long and thirty feet wide we produced something like a ton of grapes in each house. The houses were four years coming into full bearing, which must be taken into account. Now, figuring 2,000 pounds of grapes at a selling price of 50 cents per pound will give $1,000 for a house. With the present fierce competition, for the European grapes are now in the market the whole year, the price is liable to run even lower. Mr. Herrington has private ways of disposing of much of his fruit but to the man who proposes to grow strictly for a wholesale trade and who may expect to see his selling price get less every year, I would say, "go slow, and investigate fully before you jump."

I am no pessimist but, having been watching the market closely for some years, I have come to the conclusion that it will not pay me to engage in the grape growing business.

DENVER.

The fifth annual picnic of the Park Floral Company's employes was celebrated on the Fourth of July. Picnics are an every-day occurrence, but this one of the Park Floral Company, held through the generosity of its president, Mr. Valentine, is somewhat original in its character and deserves more than a passing note. Perhaps in all this broad land of ours there is not another event of like character, where the employer furnishes everything in connection with it to make it a success, and better still lends the presence of himself and family to assist in the entertainment and join in the sports. Recreation of this kind is what the florist wants and enjoys. From the hot greenhouses to these mountain breezes is a change much appreciated by the employe, and particularly by those who have recently arrived here and are daily viewing the snow-capped hills from their places of labor. The reunion of old friends who annually attend, the social features of the event, the literary entertainment joined in by visiting friends, the numerous puns of Mr. Valentine, as well as those of his father, who is a past master in the quibbling of words, will long be remembered by those present. Songs and recitations were slightly indulged in; eloquence of speech was totally insufficient for the day and occasion, but Mr. Valentine responded to a call in his easy way, paying just tribute to the memory of his departed friend and copartner, A. B. Seaman. The old employes of the firm, some of whom have been with it since its inception, and helped to steer the craft when the captain was below, were highly commended for their good work in the hours of need and the younger members were advised to go on and do likewise. Fishing, hunting and various athletic sports were carried on at intervals, and one of the attractions as well as instructive features of the day was the gathering of wild flowers for which this region is justly noted. One little girl picked thirty-four varieties and won the first prize of a silk umbrella. Prizes were offered in every contest, which were really entertaining to those participating. Sixty adults and about twenty children comprised the party that filled a special car which was side-tracked in the beautiful South Platte canon along the banks of the Platte river. Seven hours were spent in this delightful resort and all returned to the city satisfied that the fifth annual picnic of the Park Floral Co. was the best of them all in every respect.

A variety of sentiment and refreshments were indulged in by several other of the various floral establishments of the city, who allowed themselves to be piloted by Benson to a beautiful grove at Petersburg. No set program was arranged, so indolence reigned. There was another king present, but he was soon dethroned and everybody was happy. Boldt and Kurth pronounced the refreshments of the first order, and Reynolds, who is a bit of an epicure himself, substantiates the above. Scott, who was merely taken along by the boys to oversee the affairs and check all physical excesses, carried out his instructions personally, by deed and action. Scott says it was the best and most orderly picnic of its kind he ever had the pleasure of superintending.

GREAT DIVIDE.

KEWANEE, ILL.

Hamilton & Plummer expect to move their Third street greenhouses from the present location to their Terminal park establishment, only a sales office and show room being left on Third street. The down town houses have been unsatisfactory for some time as a producing place, and the idea is to centralize all the growing at the Terminal park establishment. When all the greenhouses are consolidated there will be in the neighborhood of 25,000 square feet of glass, which will compare favorably with any establishment of this kind in this neighborhood. Special attention will be given during the coming year to the production of carnations and a number of new varieties will be grown.

Conceded to be the best of all Adiantums.

A GREAT ACQUISITION.

The best of all ferns for cut fronds. Brings the highest prices. The easiest to grow and the easiest to sell. Has received the highest encomiums from the leading cut flower dealers in the country.

ADIANTUM CROWEANUM originated at Utica, N.Y., about fourteen years ago, and has been extensively grown by the original owner, Mr. Crowe, who has received phenomenal prices for the cut fronds in the New York and other markets, and has created a great demand for it. Buy now. Buy liberally and reap the benefits.

The fronds are long, elegantly proportioned and of a texture that renders it the best keeper and shipper of all Adiantums. It is a very free and continuous grower, requires no rest and responds readily to fertilizers. Anyone can grow it and get good money for it.

INTRODUCER'S DESCRIPTION. Free grower, the darkest green of the Adiantum family and longest stemmed. It has also the most graceful foliage; the average length of the fronds measuring 30 inches. It is by far the best keeper. Cut fronds can be kept fresh several weeks in a cool place. It is also one of the best ferns for a dwelling house. I have given presents of this fern to several Utica friends, and from my own observation note it grows better than the Boston fern. I gave up rose cultivation some ten months ago in order to devote all my attention to fern cultivation for cut fronds. I find from the same amount of bench room this fern pays me $1 50 to every $1.00 obtained from roses. PETER CROWE.

KEEPING AND SHIPPING QUALITIES.

With reference to a quantity of fronds sent to Liverpool, Eng., the recipient writes from that port, June 17, 1904, as follows: "The ferns were as fresh as when they were first cut and I believe you can safely send them to Europe, provided they are as carefully packed as these were. They are simply perfect." [Signed] THOMAS R. PROCTOR.

PACIFIC COAST.

PORTLAND, ORE.

We are pleased to be able to report a good June business, with nothing extraordinary having transpired. There was a steady demand for choice material for the educational and hymeneal events which characterized the month. Commencements are becoming a more and more important factor in the florists' trade and there were more flowers used this year than ever before.

The brides' favorites this season were white roses arranged in shower effects, and the result was that some very artistic work was executed, but the supply of roses fell short of the demand and we were obliged to resort to the carnation, using Flora Hill or Goethe. The latter, when made up with Asparagus Sprengeri, became quite popular and is much sought after when pink is preferred.

Funeral work, too, was much in evidence, and we noticed several handsome designs quite original in construction. During the month we were fortunate in having plenty of fine carnations and longiflorum lilies. Carnations will continue good all through July, but the lilies could not stand the racket of the glorious Fourth and took their departure. We are suffering from lack of rain and outdoor stock, which looked so promising a few weeks ago, is now almost a failure. The display of roses has been magnificent and was the admiration and wonder of eastern tourists. The extreme heat and drought, which we are not accustomed to here so early, is ruining the prospects of a midsummer crop.

We have had with us this week an interesting visitor from Fruitvale, Cal., in the person of Ralph Clarke. Six years ago Clarke Bros., of this city, built a range of glass at Fruitvale to grow cut flowers for their Portland store and Ralph was assigned to the management. This is his first visit home.

H. J. M.

PAPER WHITE NARCISSI.

The Paper White narcissus is one of the best paying cut flowers we have in California. Our climate and soil seem to be well adapted to its flowering and multiplying and, if any attention whatever is paid to it regarding watering, there is no trouble in having a succession of blooms from November until the end of March. It is of the easiest culture, only requiring that it be transplanted every third or fourth year and the weeds hoed out three or four times a season. They can be grown very close together with perfect safety. I have seen in this vicinity 100,000 bulbs planted on an acre of ground and they gave no evidences of being crowded. If the bulbs are not artificially watered they will not bloom generally before February, but it is my custom to give them a good soaking about the last week in August and another about two weeks later. This starts them making roots and when our season's rains begin, about the middle of November generally, they are already partially in bud and a good succession of flowers can be had for several months. When the patch of bulbs depends only on the winter rains to start them growing I have found that they get nicely started just about the time we begin to have our frosty weather, do not make much progress for several months and by that time all the little scattered fields of narcissus are in bloom under the same conditions and the grower realizes very little for his flowers.

When it is necessary to dig bulbs in this latitude I have found the end of July to be about the proper time to handle them, as by that time they have become sufficiently matured to suffer no shock from transplanting. When it is desired to bring bulbs into flower late in the season I do not replant before the first of January, as there is no difficulty in keeping them until that time. Narcissi do not seem to be very particular as to the soil they are grown in, provided they are in a situation where they get thoroughly dried out and have a good rest in the summer. They do very well under the shade of such trees as do not make many fibrous roots near the surface and in such a location very long stems are invariably produced.

We do not grow narcissi to any extent under glass, as with us it is such a cheap flower that it does not pay for the trouble. Regarding the prices realized on the coast, we sell the flowers, when they first come in, at an average of $1.25 per hundred. When they become more plentiful they drop in price to $1 per hundred and in the early spring, after we have had a few days warm weather, and they are offered by the thousands, they can be bought as low as from 50 to 75 cents per hundred stems. The price for bulbs here is from $5 to $7 per thousand and, as they multiply with great rapidity and need almost no attention, they are, when propery handled, one of the best paying propositions the growers have.

G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

Good flowers are still scarce and will be for several weeks to come. By this I mean carnations, roses and lilies. Outdoor stock is plentiful enough, but it is only used for show by many of the florists and is not in much demand unless indoor flowers are not to be had. The weather has been cool for several weeks and what few roses have been offered have been of fair color but weak stemmed. Carnations are holding their own and if we had any spurt in business they would be in short supply. Thrips have made their appearance in a great many places. Lawson and Hill seem to have suffered most. Valley is in fair supply and also L. longiflorum. Japanese irises are disappearing fast and the showiest flower we have at present is the gladiolus. They are being brought into the stores in large quantities and, although there is not much call for them, they make a very bright effect when massed in the shop windows.

Various Notes.

D. H. Lenox, the Los Angeles florist, is in town for a few days. He has just returned from a trip to Portland, Oregon.

F. Ludemann, of the Pacific Nursery, reports business very good for this season of the year.

N. Rolleri and J. Campiano have opened a branch store near the entrance to the Mountain View cemetery, Oakland.

W. W. Saunders, the bulb grower, is about to commence removing his stock from Golden Gate to Fresno. He is permanently located there and in future will handle his shipping orders from that place.

Mrs. J. Carbone, of West Berkeley, has finished the reconstruction of her residence recently partially destroyed by fire.

Miss Parsons, the Fresno florist, has departed for home. She made an inspection of the largest nurseries in this neighborhood while she was here, as well as the florists' stores.

DES MOINES, IA.

This has been a very good season for outdoor stuff, in fact so good that many receptions and parties have been held without much aid from the florist. Outdoor carnations are doing well and look exceedingly promising. J. F. Marshall is growing his carnations in a novel way, or at least it is novel in this section of the country. He put 10,000 plants into strawberry boxes outdoors and when planting time comes he simply takes off the boxes and sets the plants so, thus saving the working roots. The boxes are better than pots, since they are larger and being square they pack closer, taking up less room and hence are easier to care for.

The parks are looking better this season than usual as the foliage is so dense and luxuriant. Dorothy Perkins roses at Union park have been exceedingly fine and the fact that it is entirely hardy has proven it to be the rose for this climate.

Park Commissioner E. J. Fairall has gone west in search of health. He had expected to accompany "ye scribe" to the convention but his physician ordered him to southern California.

John D. Lambert and W. L. Morris have just returned from a few days with hook and line. We hear that Lambert caught 106 pounds of fish, and we saw one pickerel which he brought to his father that was thirty inches long. He declares that he caught it with a frog and not with an eagle.

Des Moines will not be strongly represented at the convention this year. Our State Fair will be held the latter part of August and those attending the convention will have but a little while to prepare for it after returning.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Business the past week has been very quiet. We have had a very dry spell and it was hard on all plants, especially on field carnations, but on Friday came a fine rain and it made things look fresh again. The carnations in this section are not up to last year, growth rather small.

The Kentucky Society of Florists held its monthly meeting July 5, at River View park, and it was largely attended. The object of the meeting was to see if the members would agree to raise the prices on all kinds of plants, as all kinds of material have advanced, especially coal, and lots of other things which florists must have.

Jos. Coenen & Co.'s house of carnations, all the latest ones, is doing fine.

F. Walker & Co. have moved into their new store on Fourth avenue and are ready to do a big business.

Miss Alice Miller has moved from her old stand to Jefferson, between Second and Third streets.

Wm. Mann is suffering with a bad carbuncle.

J. E. Marrett and family will attend the Elks' festival at Cincinnati July 18.

Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Bohrman have left on their vacation and will be gone some three weeks. They will visit Evansville and the St. Louis World's Fair.

Nanz & Neuner, out at St. Mathews, are making a very fine rustic entrance to their place. HY. LICHTEFELD.

PIPING.

Will you please state the amount of return pipe a 2-inch flow will feed? We have a 3-inch main and wish to heat six runs of 2-inch pipes 124 feet long, three runs under each bench. Our idea was to take two 2-inch flows from the 3-inch main and carry them to the far end of the house, there feeding the 2-inch returns. The boiler is four feet below the returns and we can raise one inch in each ten feet. C. & F. D.

There is little doubt but that the scheme proposed would work quite satisfactorily. My idea would be to carry the 3-inch flow pipe under the ridge to the far end of the house, there divide it into 2-inch branches and feed three returns under each bench from each of the branches. A 2-inch pipe is capable of supplying about 400 feet of radiation and as the six 2-inch pipes 124 feet long only have 481 feet of radiation, one 2-inch supply is nearly large enough to supply all six of them. With the fall which can be given it is quite safe to say that hot water can be made to act quite satisfactorily in this length of pipe, although in general it is not best to endeavor to circulate hot water in runs of pipe exceeding 100 feet in length without a circulating pump.

To-Bak-Ine Fumigating Powder

Kills all kinds of Aphides.

50 lbs., $1.50; 100 lbs., $3.00

Send postal for a free copy of "WORDS OF WISDOM" by leading growers; also for a free 5 lb. bag of TO-BAK-INE POWDER, sufficient for two thorough fumigations in a house 100x24 ft. This 5 lb. bag will be sent for the express charges only.

DIRECTIONS FOR A HOUSE 100 X 24 FEET.

Use 2 to 3 pounds of TO-BAK-INE FUMIGATING POWDER, equally divided into 4 or 5 portions, and placed on fine wire cloth or tin pie plates. Pour a little kerosene around on thin edge of piles and then light; it will burn slowly without blazing. Note the fumes of nicotine. Best to fumigate in moist atmosphere. Note—An ordinary 6-inch pot will hold, heaping full, about a pound of TO-BAK-INE POWDER.

EXCELSIOR, MINN.—The first annual show of the Minnesota Rose Society was held at the casino at Lake Minnetonka July 9. There was a large display and a good attendance.

TORONTO.

The Market.

We are now settled to the routine of July business, which cannot be said to be anything above the ordinary. Stock has been coming in quite plentifully and quality gradually deteriorating. Roses and carnations are especially plentiful. Since the peonies are done there has been quite a call for lilies and other large flowers for designs. George Guard has brought in the first Lilium auratum seen in town this season.

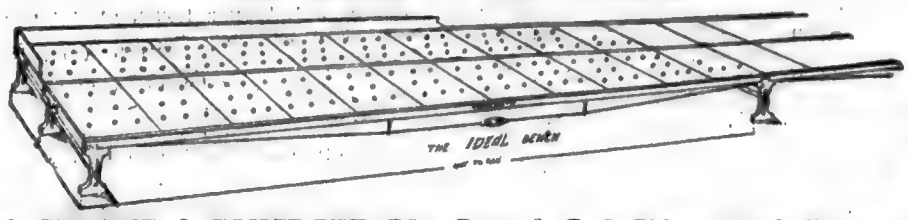
Various Notes.

T. A. Plum, one of Yonge street's enterprising florists, has purchased Mr. Butterworth's greenhouses on Howland avenue. Mr. Plum is figuring on growing a good portion of the cut flowers he will want for his store in future. Mr. Butterworth, who is one of the oldest florists in Toronto, has retired from active business.

J. S. Simmons carried off first and second prizes with his delivery wagons at the open-air horse show on July 1. He has bought a new dapple gray horse which he considers a sure winner in any company.

The Toronto Horticultural Association had an enjoyable outing on July 6 in the form of an excursion to the Guelph model farm.

The florists of Toronto, as well as amateur horticulturists, are at present working hard completing plans for the big flower and fruit exhibition to be held in Toronto this fall. The prize list for the flower section has just been issued and is the most elaborate that Toronto florists have had the privilege of competing for, something over $1,500, besides medals and certificates, being in the list. Those who have not had a copy of the prize list should write the Toronto Gardeners' and Florists' Association, E. Collins, secretary.



The Canadian Horticultural Association meets at Ottawa August 9 and 10 and those wishing to have a good time should take it in. D. J.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Propagating Alternantheras.

Carpet bedding has largely gone out of fashion, but not entirely, and that most useful of all little plants for this purpose, the alternanthera, should be propagated about the end of the month. I am aware that many lift the plants at the approach of frost, putting them in flats and pulling them to pieces in the spring. I like better to put in the cuttings in summer time. With two inches of sandy soil and the cuttings put in thickly in the flats, they will now root like chickweed in any shady place and the flats can be kept out of doors until danger of frost. This little tropical plant winters well in these flats if kept on the dry side. You don't want them to grow during the winter and a high temperature is not necessary if they are kept dry or only enough water given to keep them from shriveling up.

Coleus Cuttings.

This is not a bad time, either, to take a few dozen cuttings of the varieties of coleus that you wish to grow. The coleus is a victim of the mealy bug and the plants are not worth cleaning. Some varieties, notably the valuable yellow Golden Bedder, are also troubled with a rust. By August 1 you will, from the plants outside, be able to get vigorous cuttings, bugless and rustless, and before cold weather they will be strong young plants in 4-inch pots and will give you more cuttings, as well as thriving in less heat, than the little puny plants propagated late in September.

Primula Sinensis.

The Chinese primula does not enjoy the hot weather we are now having and there is no better place for the young plants, the earliest of which may now be in 3-inch pots, than a frame with shaded glass and the sashes raised back and front as described last week for the lilies. There is always danger with plants in a frame that it is "out of sight, out of mind," unless it is some man's special duty to attend to the frames. If there is any danger of neglect, keep them in the greenhouse but, while shaded, in a position where they get free ventilation, or they will grow soft and long leaf stalks. These primulas delight to root into leaf-mold and when you shift them use a third of it.

Primula Obconica.

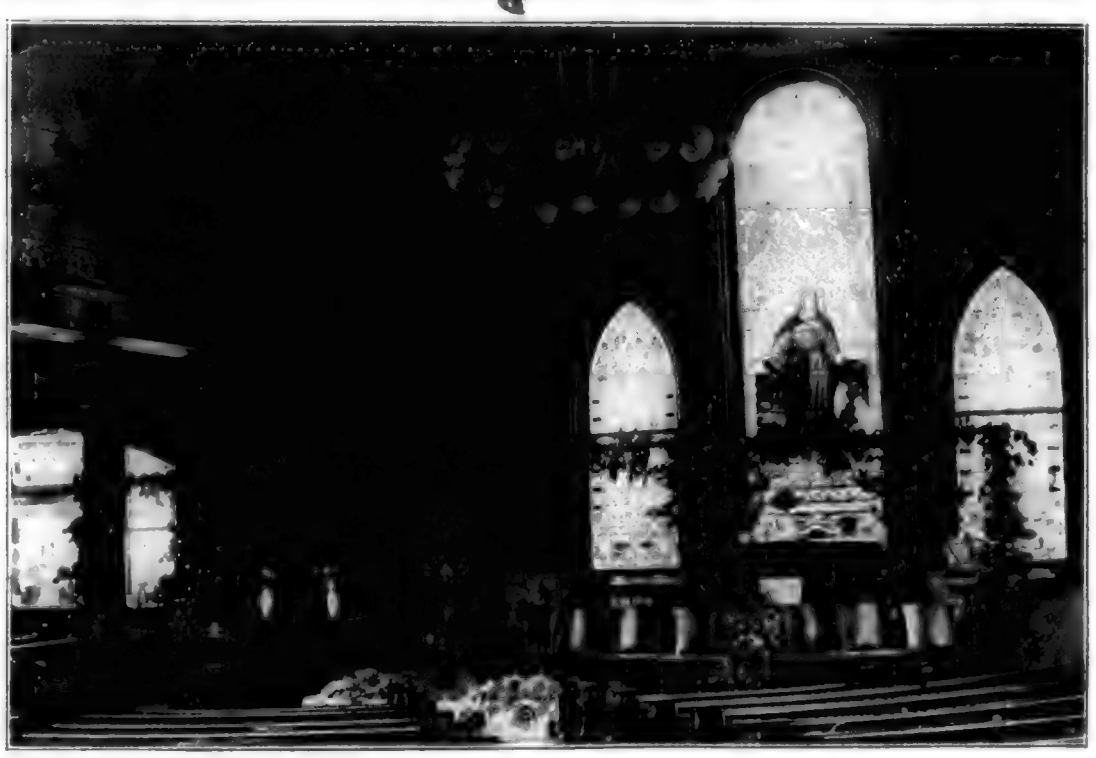
Primula obconica has been so remarkably improved in size and coloring that it has about driven Primula Sinensis to the woods. It was a long time before the many good qualities of P. obconica were appreciated, except by a few. For the last few years it has taken its place as one of our most valuable winter blooming plants. It is difficult to say what, for an inexpensive plant, is more showy and lasting and its season is long. It does a wonderful lot of growing after cold weather sets in. A frame is a very good place for the little plants now, whether in flats or pots, but they don't want as much shade as the Chinese primroses and on dull days would be better fully exposed without any covering. Neither is leaf-mold so essential for the obconica. A good yellow loam, with a fourth of well rotted cow manure, will grow them finely. Don't forget that obconica is most useful as a cut flower for designs, etc. It is now one of the all-around indispensables.

Growers' Busy Season.

It appeals to me, in watching operations, that while this and next month are the very dullest for sales, and almost a shut-up time with the store men, it is yet a heavy, laborious time with the grower and the hardest work of the year has to be done in the hottest weather. Benches to be emptied and refilled for carnations and roses, and perhaps some mums and violets yet, and if this hot spell lasts a few more days we will be busy with the hose. This is not laborious; it should be a pleasure. Our continent is so large and climate so varied that while we may be watering asters, a water spout or thunder storm may be flooding some other locality. We are getting dry and, if good results are looked for, water must be applied. I have, in years gone by, spoken against the abuse of the hose and have not altered my mind, yet "circumstances alter cases."

Necessity for Watering.

For instance, if you got your plants out the very earliest opportunity that was safe in the spring, then with such frequent showers as we have had up to now, the roots of the plants would be deep down, strong and vigorous and with frequent hoeing to keep the surface loose and allow free evaporation and ensuing rise of moisture from below, little need would there be of watering for many of our flower garden plants. Geraniums, particularly, need no artificial watering if once well established. If the soil in our gardens and fields was trenched two feet deep, as the European nurserymen often do, there would be little need of watering.



Now, the reverse of these favorable conditions with us is that our fields where asters, carnations, stock geraniums, cannas and many other things are planted, have been ploughed only seven or eight inches deep. There are a whole lot of ploughmen who will make the eight inches six inches if you don't watch out. Then many a grower is late in getting out his stock and hot, dry weather sets in before there is a strong root growth.

Growers of experience, those who have moved from east to west, say that without irrigation it would be impossible to keep alive, much less grow anything, in Colorado and perhaps other states may be even less favorably supplied with water in the good old summer time. So conditions must be studied in our eastern states. Some seasons there may not be two successive weeks without a copious rain, and again we have all been occasionally two months without a drop. Water is the staple food of plants, but how to apply it artificially is the gardeners' knowledge. This sprinkling that you often see done, wetting the soil perhaps one inch below the surface, and leaving it baked and caked at that, is nothing but an apology for watering and I truly believe worse than nothing, not a quarter as much good as a hoeing.

Sweet Peas.

Sweet peas have been fine with us and I hope will continue to be, if every flower is plucked as soon as developed. When allowed to go to seed your vines will soon stop blooming. Hoe between the rows deeply, then spread three inches of stable manure between the rows completely covering the ground. Then you can let the hose run for half an hour on one spot and that will be thoroughly watered; with the mulching it will be a long time in drying out; at least, in the driest of weather, no watering will be needed for a week, with proper cultivation.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Propagating Alternantheras.

Carpet bedding has largely gone out of fashion, but not entirely, and that most useful of all little plants for this purpose, the alternanthera, should be propagated about the end of the month. I am aware that many lift the plants at the approach of frost, putting them in flats and pulling them to pieces in the spring. I like better to put in the cuttings in summer time. With two inches of sandy soil and the cuttings put in thickly in the flats, they will now root like chickweed in any shady place and the flats can be kept out of doors until danger of frost. This little tropical plant winters well in these flats if kept on the dry side. You don't want them to grow during the winter and a high temperature is not necessary if they are kept dry or only enough water given to keep them from shriveling up.

Coleus Cuttings.

This is not a bad time, either, to take a few dozen cuttings of the varieties of coleus that you wish to grow. The coleus is a victim of the mealy bug and the plants are not worth cleaning. Some varieties, notably the valuable yellow Golden Bedder, are also troubled with a rust. By August 1 you will, from the plants outside, be able to get vigorous cuttings, bugless and rustless, and before cold weather they will be strong young plants in 4-inch pots and will give you more cuttings, as well as thriving in less heat, than the little puny plants propagated late in September.

Primula Sinensis.

The Chinese primula does not enjoy the hot weather we are now having and there is no better place for the young plants, the earliest of which may now be in 3-inch pots, than a frame with shaded glass and the sashes raised back and front as described last week for the lilies. THE ADIANTUMS.

ED. REVIEW:—Since naming my new fern plants Adiantum Croweanum, about a year ago, I have heard through other parties that there are a great many growers who claim they have the same kind of fern as mine. I have sent fronds of my fern to some of these parties and have had no reply afterward from them.

I have on my place several kinds of adiantum, such as cuneatum, decorum, concinnum, Bausei and Mr. Ley's hybridum, which, when in young plants, it would take experts to point out the very slight differences, but when from five to six months old there is a vast difference in all kinds. Those growers who claim they have the same fern as Adiantum Croweanum, if they are good growers, why did they not push it for all it was worth when they found they had a money maker?

Now, I challenge those men to exhibit samples of their plants at the florists' convention in St. Louis in August. I want them to put up or shut up. I will have a few plants of my fern at that convention, also a few hundred of the cut fronds. Will also have a few plants of other kinds of adiantum.

MULCHING.

Plants that were set out on the benches in May now have the soil filled with roots and to keep things up to par a light mulch is necessary. This mulch will serve a double purpose. It will protect the roots from the hot sun and afford nourishment to the plants. The bed should have a dusting of fine bone meal, the finer the better, and then a nice layer of half rotted cow manure, from half an inch to one inch in thickness.

I always prefer cow manure to any other for this mulching because it is mild and does not burn the roots, if sufficiently decayed. Do not use fresh cow manure by any means, or the ammonia rising from it will strip all the bottom leaves off the plants and kill all the feeding roots. If one has nothing but the fresh manure, it should be mixed with an equal bulk of dry soil and turned over several times before being used. Sheep manure that has previously been used for making liquid makes a fair top dressing, but I would not care to use it fresh as received from the dealers. Some growers use leaf-mold to top dress with, mixing with it either fine bone, or a highly concentrated fertilizer like Clay's, and it seems to work very well.

Whatever is used, do not delay too long in putting it on, the idea being to keep the plants moving along nicely without a check of any kind. Always remember in feeding a plant that [illegible] applied frequently is very much better than a strong dose of anything applied at once. In the absence of any kind of manure suitable for top dressing, tobacco stems scattered over the bed will keep it from drying out too rapidly and help to keep down the black and green fly.

Watering with liquid water need not yet be commenced unless you are growing your plants in pots or boxes and think they really need it.

Seasonable Work.

Routine work mostly is now in order. By killing all the butterflies that you find in the houses much of the work of chasing caterpillars will be done away with, though there are always enough to keep one from getting lonesome.

Keep the side shoots and suckers picked off and have the plant grow on in the straight and narrow way. Do not neglect the tying up of your plants until they are falling all over and getting crooked in the stem. The keynote of chrysanthemum growing is never to put off till tomorrow what should be done to-day.

Where plants are producing buds, some little care is necessary. Pinch out the bud and leave the three or four young shoots all grow until you can see that they are not blind; then select the best one and remove all the others. This disbudding should not be hurried, because it sometimes happens that a shoot makes one or two leaves and then goes blind after it has apparently started away all right. As a general thing I have found that the second shoot below the bud is the best one to retain.

A New Pest.

Hearing of a new pest that is raising havoc with a friend's plants, I journeyed to see it and found that it is a serious matter. It is a grub about an inch long, with a light-colored head, and having a violet-colored stripe running down from the head to the tail. This grub seems to penetrate the plant at a point where the bark is soft, and then bores its way right up to the top of the plant eating out all the center of the stem and leaving nothing but the outer bark. The whole plant, of course, collapses and the grub then seems to move on to the next one, and the process is repeated. Occasionally he turns round, and bores down to the soil, coming out at the base of the plant. It is a new grub to me and I certainly hope it will be a stranger to all my readers. It is very active and gets away in double quick time when disturbed, with the humpy movement common to most of the type.

It seems impossible to suggest any way of getting rid of it. Its method of getting all its food from inside the plant precludes the possibility of using poison, and about all one can do is to cut off the plant and kill the borer after the damage is done. Where it passes its existence up to the boring stage I cannot say, but it seems to appear out of the soil. I feel positive in saying that the eggs are not deposited in the plants to hatch out. If any reader can throw any light on this fellow, such information would be greatly appreciated.

Filling the Benches.

The first of August should see a great part of the field grown stock in the benches. Many growers hesitate to throw out the old plants if there is a prospect of a few good blooms ahead, but the longer old stock is held, the less time the new plants will have to become firmly established in their permanent quarters; besides many varieties, if left in the field until the middle or last of August, get too large to handle well.

Medium-sized plants are preferable as a rule. They will lift better, can be housed more rapidly, will take hold of the soil sooner and in finishing their growth must necessarily get more firmly established than large plants nearly or quite mature. The exception to the rule is with slow-growing varieties of the nature of Mrs. Bradt, which, to give paying returns, requires large plants at housing time. However, this should be provided for by early propagation.

If planting is deferred till late the rush of work often necessitates putting off needed repairs to benches and hurried filling of same, when in point of fact this operation demands thorough work and time to do it well. Filling benches, while seeming to call chiefly for main strength, nevertheless needs considerable common sense and intelligence mixed in if any degre of success is looked for.

One of the main objects is to have the soil of equal density throughout and this is much easier to accomplish by arranging the help to level the soil as fast as brought in instead of dumping large quantities here and there and leveling afterwards. One may think, from appearance, a bench to be properly filled but after planting and several good waterings the defects, if any, will show when it is too late to remedy them.

Some growers advocate putting manure in the bottom before filling with soil and others regard the practice as a waste of raw material. After reported expriments I would recommend about an inch layer of not too well rotted horse manure sprinkld fairly well with bone meal. Have the manure moist when spread, immediatly apply the bone and cover with soil at once.

Employes of the Park Floral Co., Denver, Starting on their Annual Picnic.

Several years ago we tried tobacco stems in a section of bench which had no manure at the bottom of the other sections. Careful observation all winter and spring failed to show any advantage whatever in using the stems.

I would not recommend planting a bench immediately after filling, or even the next day. If possible allow a week or more to intervene between filling and planting. During that time the soil gets settled and numerous weed seeds sprout, which are destroyed by a thorough raking in of a sprinkling of air-slaked lime a day or two previous to planting, at which time a watering may be needed to put the soil in just the right mechanical condition. GEO. S. OSBORN.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Size of Plants.

There is a great difference in opinion as to whether it is best to plant early, regardless of the size of the plants, or to wait until the plants have grown to a certain size, even though it may cause one to plant a little late. Nearly every grower likes to plant strong, bushy plants, with fifteen or twenty shoots ready to start into growth, and such plants can easily be had by September. But to have such plants by July 10 is quite another question and up to August 1 you will usually find more plants with less than a dozen good leads than you will find with over that number. Even with early propagated stock you will find this to be true, and among plants grown from cuttings taken after February 1 you will find mostly from six to ten shoots to the plant.

Personally I do not think anything is gained by leaving the plants out after August 1 to gain size. If the plants average very small I would not advocate extremely early planting, but I would by all means get my plants housed early in August, even though the plants be small. You can set two plants together or plant a little closer if you like, but you will find that the plant will grow as rapidly in the house during the fall months as they would in the field. If a plant has made enough growth in the field to require the third topping, which will mean about eight shoots, I would not hesitate to bring it in. Such a plant will take hold quickly and if planted before August 1 it can be topped again before it is allowed to come into bloom and by September 1 it ought to have fifteen good young shoots ready to run up to bud. They will be more certain to run up, too, than if the fifteen shoots had been started in the field before the plant was brought in.

Give me a medium sized plant in preferance to a large one, always. A few seasons ago we bought several hundred plants of Flora Hill late in August. Most of them came out of a batch of medium-sized plants, all except 100, which were very large and bushy, with at least twenty or more shoots to each plant. No doubt the grower thought he was doing us a favor by sending us those fine, large plants, and we thought so, too. But in less than six weeks we changed our minds. The smaller plants went right to work and bloomed early, while the large ones just stood still and looked sick until toward spring.

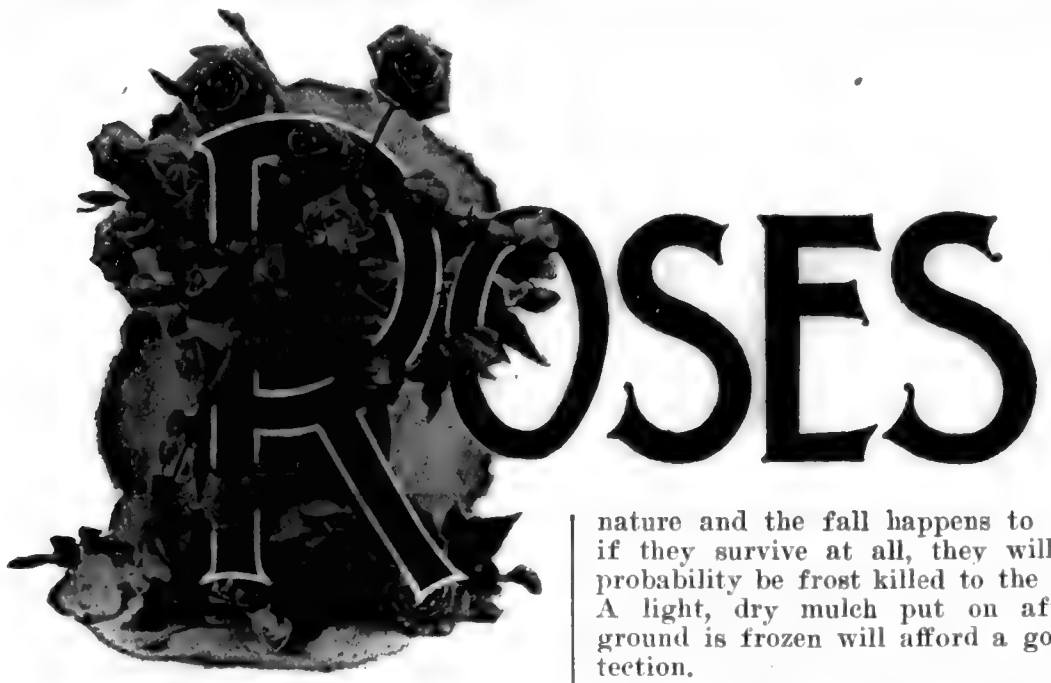
You can notice the same thing right along in your beds. You will always find the smaller plants recover quicker than the larger ones and if any of them die you usually find them among the larger ones. You will always find more dead leaves on the larger plants when you clean them off later on. The medium-sized plant will throw a few less blooming shoots the first crop, but you will find the stems grow longer and the blooms come larger than those on the large plants. The difference in the quality alone will make up the difference in the quantity of the first fall crop. You will also find less tendency to crop with the medium-sized plants later in the winter.

The foregoing is taking for granted that you plant early, say before August 15. If you choose between medium-sized plants August 1 and large plants September 1, then you will find the medium-sized early plants even more preferable. A. F. J. BAUR.

FREESIAS.

We have one house planted in mums. They are planted ten inches by twelve inches apart. If we plant freesias between the rows when the mums show buds will the freesias do well? We have never grown them before and as the mums are early ones we thought the freesias could be done that way so they could have the room after the mums are gone. How long does it take freesias to bloom, and narcissi? Will freesias do well in flats with two and a half inches of good, rich soil? A. R.

To plant freesias between chrysanthemums is a very poor combination, the worst I can think of. Your mums are so far apart that to make them profitable you should get at least three blooms to each plant. They will shade every inch of the ground and their roots will occupy all of it. Don't do it.



You can grow freesias in 5-inch or 6-inch pots, seven or eight plants to a pot, or you can plant them in flats of three and a half or four inches of soil; two and a half inches is rather shallow.

The best freesias I have ever seen were grown on a bench, such as you use for carnations. The corms were about three inches apart and the rows about five inches. Freesias are beautiful, delicate, sweet scented flowers and deserve generous treatment. The time from planting to flowering will depend somewhat upon the temperature and season. In midwinter in a carnation temperature it may be three months. Don't forget that a freesia is not a bulb. It is a corm and starts to grow directly it is planted and does not need covering or darkness to keep top growth dormant, as is necessary with the true bulbs, tulips, hyacinths and narcissi.

The narcissus family is a large one and their time of flowering varies greatly when forced. Supposing you planted all the forcing narcissi as soon as received, say the end of September. Then you could have in flower the Dutch Von Sion by early January, Golden Spur a week or so later, Princeps about the middle of February, and some fine narcissi cannot be flowered satisfactorily until the middle of March. The French grown bulbs of some narcissi are received in August and can be had in flower much earlier, the well known Paper White in early November, the French Trumpet Major in December and the pretty yellow Campernelle flowers easily by Christmas, so there is a wide difference in the adaptability for forcing among narcissi.

PRECAUTIONS.

During the bright summer weather green fly, while not so troublesome as during the winter months, should be carefully looked after and kept in check. A systematic fumigation once a week during these months will reduce their numbers to such an extent that they will be easier to manage during the winter.

Our ever present enemy, red spider, should also share our attention, and all nooks and corners where the syringe cannot have full play should be thoroughly inspected, as it is there they congregate, multiply and if not combatted, will soon overrun a house.

During the season when firing cannot be resorted to mildew is still our most troublesome and insidious enemy and it is only by close attention to providing a supply of pure, fresh air, avoiding draughts and a judicious use of the sulphur blower that we can escape having trouble with this pest.

So that the plants may derive the full benefit from the fresh air supplied, and to facilitate syringing, supporting and training the bushes should never be neglected. By keeping the growths in an upright position the eyes will break stronger, thus avoiding that strawy, we formation of wood which can never produce a high grade bloom, but is more likely to be followed by a heavy crop of blind wood, which, as one of my correspondents naively remarks, "does not command much of a price even during the holiday season."

Ribes.

PROTECTING ROSES.

Is the American Beauty hardy? Will it stand zero weather? How should one make a cold frame to keep rose plants over winter? What attention do they require during winter? Sometimes it gets as low as zero.

G. W. R.

Yes, the American Beauty is hardy, and in New York there should be little trouble in keeping it over winter. Of course, this depends altogether on conditions. If the soil is of a cold, moist nature and the fall happens to be wet, if they survive at all, they will in all probability be frost killed to the ground. A light, dry mulch put on after the ground is frozen will afford a good protection.

Any ordinary frame that is deep enough to hold the plants laid on their sides, with ample room for a good covering of dry litter or leaves, with a board or sash covering to keep out the wet, and a covering over all to protect them during very severe weather, will suffice. When danger from hard frost is past the covering should be removed and the plants gradually exposed to the light. After a few days of this treatment they can be planted in their summer quarters.

Ribes.

ROSES AND GREENS.

Can roses and Adiantum cuneatum be grown successfully in the same house? If so, under what conditions? How would asparagus do in the same house with roses?

W. J.

The temperature of a rose house would suit adiantum but the amount of fumigation required by roses would be fatal to them. There are no conditions under which the two can be grown together successfully, and the same objections are applicable to asparagus. A partition across the house, if carefully planned and executed, would make conditions more suitable for both of these crops.

Ribes.

OUTDOOR ROSES.

I read the article "Outdoor Roses" that appeared in the last number of the Review and, as W. W. D. asks for information concerning the behavior of his plants and methods of culture, I venture to give our experience along that line.

First, in answer to the inquiry as to the cause of the condition of the plants: The cause of the weak growth and undeveloped buds is lack of proper nourishment, caused by slow or dormant root action, which is affected by cool, wet weather and souring of the soil. This inactivity of the roots also causes the leaves to turn yellow and drop off, also promotes blackspot, a fungus growth which causes the spots noticed on the leaves.

Pure bone meal, free from acid, will do no harm, and will promote free flowering. Hellebore will not kill aphides, as they suck the sap from the tissues of the plant. Spraying the plant with water in hot, dry weather would be beneficial, but not necessary to vigorous growth.

We make our rose bed where the soil is well drained. If the soil is a good clay loam it is all right. We dig the soil twelve inches deep, and to every three cubic feet of soil add one cubic foot of thoroughly rotted manure. Set the plants in the spring as soon as hard freezing weather is over. Water when necessary, but never overwater. Keep a mulch of fine soil over the bed by cultivating, after every rain as soon as dry enough. Stir the soil close up to the plants and about two inches deep. This airs and sweetens the soil and promotes vigorous growth. Disbud by pinching out all buds as soon as large enough to get hold of. Take off just the bud and continue to do this until the plants are thoroughly established, which is shown by vigorous young shoots and large foliage. When the buds on these first strong shoots begin to show color cut them off, taking about one-half the stem with them. This will give strong growth, which may be allowed to produce flowers. Spread three or four inches of rotted manure on the beds, the beginning of spring and work in well.

As to insects and fungi: The rose slug can be poisoned, with a weak solution of Paris green or powdered hellebore. For aphides we use one tablspoonful of nitrate of soda to twelve quarts of water, watering the plants with this solution every ten days until the aphides disappear. For mildew use sulphur but, better still, select those varieties of roses which are less liable to mildew. For blackspot keep foliage sprayed with ammoniacal copper carbonate solution, from start to finish.

ASPARAGUS.

I have about 1,500 fine young Asparagus plumosus plants which I think of planting on a bench for cutting during the winter. I have a solid bed 5x75 three feet from the glass. With good rich soil, will this do? I have another bench 6x75 in a house ten feet high. Would this be better? Does asparagus pay best cut in sprays or strings? How far apart should they be planted?

F. I.

A solid bed is much the best for growing Asparagus plumosus, especially if it is to be grown to strings, and if this be the purpose a house with ten feet of headroom above the bed is none too high. The low bench could be used for asparagus that is to be cut as sprays, many growers planting the asparagus on side benches containing about six inches of soil when it is intended to be cut in that way. This method applies to both A. plumosus and Sprengeri.

Some time is required to establish a bed of asparagus so that long strings will be produced, and a deep bed of rich soil is needed for the purpose, good loam, with about one-fifth of well rotted stable manure, forming a suitable compost, and the bed having a depth of about two feet, including a layer of broken bricks or cinders that should be placed in the bottom for drainage.

The plants should be spaced fifteen to eighteen inches apart in the bed, and during the summer the glass should have a light shading. The best temperature for asparagus during the winter is 65° at night. As the season is progressing rapidly, the sooner the asparagus is planted the better. W. H. TAPLIN.

GREENHOUSES AND HELP.

[A paper by J. W. Dunford, read before the St. Louis Florists' Club, July 14, 1904.]

Having been assigned to lead a discussion on greenhouse building at this meeting, with the privilege of choosing my own subject if I wish, it now develops that I am expected to write an essay.

Treating the topic of greenhouse building in a general way, I will say that the high price of labor and material, I think, has put a temporary check on the erection of houses in some sections. Perhaps it is just as well, for there is certainly a limit to the consumption of all luxuries, including flowers. The tendency in building is ever to improve on existing types, and this is as it should be, for there is room for much improvement and the situation merits more thought than it generally gets. Take the ventilating machinery and sash alone, while a thousand times better than the types seen twenty-five years ago, yet who can say that there is at present anything like a perfect system?

Men who build, construction men and greenhouse men alike, copy too much. A has built a new range, and like all other new houses, it is capable of growing good stuff, and, A being a good grower, takes advantage of his opportunities. B sees the range, likes the style and falls in love with the kind of stock that can be grown in it, goes home and builds in just the same way, only to regret it in a few years, perhaps.

Houses for cut flowers built connected lengthwise, that is, with no open space between, seem to be returning to favor. For good reasons, too, as the temperature is more easy to regulate in them. They are also more economical to heat and build. The tendency seems to be to keep the gutters high. This is also good for many reasons, the chief being the saving of valuable space, besides giving a better circulation of air. Just why houses of this type are better built narrow, we could never see, except that this brings the ridge lower, but the extra time in taking care of the air, besides extra cost in building, more than offsets this.

In regard to iron versus wooden gutters, while the former of course are the better of the two in point of durability, in building a range where cheapness is any consideration I would not use iron. With us we find necessity for an extra galvanized drip gutter under the iron gutter, which is never needed under a good wooden gutter.

The most popular bench, and we think the best is one made on the ground with plenty of good drainage, either tile or cinders. This is the most durable bed and need not cost nearly as much as a wooden one.

Now about help. The nature and qualification of our helpers is largely governed by the class of work they are wanted for. The small man, who is grower and retailer alike, must needs have men of experience about him. This is also true of wholesaler and retailer, pure and simple. The large grower must have a few good experienced men, but can depend on inexperienced help for much of the routine work.

To be successful in handling men a man must be diplomatic. Give in all you consistently can, but make it known that there is a limit and never go beyond the limitations. When a man thinks he is worth more to you than you do, don't coax him to stay, but rather encourage him to find a place with more money in it.

Never use or permit bad language. When a man is inclined that way, talk to him sensibly and let him know that you don't like it. If he persists after he has been told to wash his mouth out a few times, let him go.

Treat all men with kindness and consideration. Never ask a man to do what you would not be willing to do yourself. Encourage your help to think for themselves, and if they can improve on your methods, let them. In the case of experienced help, if you know your way is best, stick to it and see that it is done that way. Never mind what your man used to do at Mr. So and So's with great success. Pay the best wages to the best men. One good man is better than three poor ones.

FINDLAY, O.—E. J. Foster has sold a one-third interest in his greenhouses and business and the firm will hereafter be Foster & Fellabaum. The plan is to considerably enlarge the plant.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The market is still quiescent. The weather is wilting. Chicago is not the only city where the "breath of the simoon" is felt. Here, with the tempering ocean breezes, Monday gave us nearly 100 degrees of heat and about 1,000 degrees of humidity, an infliction which your inland cities cannot appreciate. The wholesale men close early these days, and the retailers ought to.

Stock is not quite so plentiful, and consequently the market began to "sit up and take notice" on Saturday. But it had the usual relapse Monday and there are no signs of immediate recovery. Asters have asserted themselves once more and are of fine quality. Sweet peas are less abundant and prices slightly advanced from the valueless quotations of the month. Plenty of lilies, still, of every kind. Carnations and roses sufficient for any possible demand. Society is at Newport and shipments to that center from New York are abundant.

Various Notes.

The "traveler" representing the F. R. Pierson Co. was fortunate in securing from the billionaire oil merchant lately, an order for 10,000 evergreens to add to the beauty of the great estate at Pocantico Hills, which John D. Rockefeller intends to make, when complete, the grandest horticultural paradise this side of the "Everlasting Hills."

The president of the New York Cut Flower Exchange, Wm. Amos, Sr., of Woodside, L. I., has retired in favor of his son, Wm. Amos, Jr., after thirty-five years of business experience as a grower, and with the universal respect and good will of his confreres.

N. Lecakes & Co. have purchased the stock and fixtures of G. E. Bradshaw and moved from 45 West Twenty-ninth street to their new quarters on Saturday. They will hereafter make 53 West Twenty-ninth street their headquarters, having assumed the lease of the premises. Mr. Bradshaw made an assignment to John Foley, of 213 East Forty-fifth street. He asserts that the book accounts will about meet the liabilities.

Philip J. Kessler has been appointed general manager of the Cut Flower Exchange. The right man for the place and always faithful to its interests.

George Saltford and family will enjoy their annual outing at Oswego and vicinity, and David Mellis and family, of Flatbush, are in the Adirondacks.

Mr. Hayden, of the Florists' Board of Trade, is planning to enlarge the scope and usefulness of his information and collection system, and to the extent of his reference book, which should be in the hands of every nurseryman and florist in the country. He is now sending to his patrons advance ratings of anyone not mentioned in his quarterly book, free of charge.

Elliott reports his first consignment of Harrisii already sold, and the arrival this week from the south of France of a large stock of seeds of primula, calceolaria and cineraria.

Alf. Wheeler, of Weeber & Don, is in Worcester, England, enjoying a two months' pleasure trip amid familiar scenes.

Charles Noll, formerly with French, of Tuxedo, is now with Mr. Butler at Hartsdale, N. Y., and Walter Jack, lately with C. Lambert, has taken a position as manager on the estate of John C. Alexander, of Lennox, Mass.

fields exceptionally fine this season, the best for many years, but believes the total yield of the island will not amount to more than seventy-five per cent of last year's output.

The design for the gold medal of the Horticultural Society of New York has been prepared by the committee, of which Patrick O'Mara is chairman, and is very handsome.

The July number of the Journal of New York Botanical Garden has an exhaustive report by G. V. Nash on the effects of the past winter on shrubs, which is very interesting.

R. Ulrich, the landscape architect, whose wonderful handiwork many of the S. A. F. conventionists will remember at Omaha, Buffalo and Chicago, has returned from southern California, where he laid out an immense park, and is now located at 136 Liberty street, New York.

The American Institute of New York will hold its first fall show September 21 and 22 at the Berkeley Lyceum. Dahlias, gladioli, and vegetables will comprise the bulk of the exhibits. November 10 to 17 the Great Show will take place in the Herald Square Exhibition Hall. Seventy-four classes of the cut flower division alone are devoted to chrysanthemums.

Prizes of $100 and $50 are offered for plant groups and liberal premiums in every department of the great exhibition.

W. H. Long, with C. H. Brown, of 412 Columbus avenue, and formerly with Thorley, is enjoying his holidays in Boston, and John Curry of the same establishment is recuperating at Lake Hopatcong.

Reed & Keller have already in readiness two carloads of samples for shipment to the St. Louis convention, with many surprises in the way of new designs and novelties. Mr. Reed will leave early for St. Louis, and says his display will far exceed any exhibit ever made by his firm at any meeting of the S. A. F. He reports sales of over 20,000 of his folding bells to date and the season is hardly begun.

The interest in the coming convention is just beginning and the prospects for a good representation from New York and vicinity are encouraging. In another week definite information as to the number can be given. There is no doubt the Baltimore & Ohio will have a jolly company to test its courtesy and conveniences. A good many have arranged with Mrs. Ellison, the popular St. Louis florist, to make their home with her during their stay in the city and while visiting the World's Fair after the convention closes.

White Cloud Carnation at Sinner Bros.', Chicago.

THE SINNER PLACE.

The accompanying illustrations show three views in the establishment of Sinner Bros., on Ridge avenue, in Rogers Park, the well known market gardening and greenhouse suburb of Chicago. The Sinner establishment is within a stone's throw of the big range of Wietor Bros. and also close to M. Winandy. The place was originally given to vegetables, during the days of Theodore Sinner, the father of the present proprietors,

Wm. Hillebrecht, of Secaucus, died suddenly on Saturday, of heart disease, and was buried on Monday. Only four weeks ago Mrs. Hillebrecht was buried. Universal sympathy for the bereft family is felt by all in the trade. Mr. Hillebrecht was still a young man and had a prosperous business.

Miss Herrington, the youngest sister of Arthur Herrington, of Madison, has arrived from England and will make her brother a protracted visit.

Julius Roehrs and Mrs. Roehrs have been enjoying the sea air at Newport, R. I., during the past week with the rest of the millionaires.

J. M. Keller and family, of Bay Ridge, are at Elka Park, in the Catskills, in their summer cottage.

Mrs. Carl Hoffbauer, daughter of Julius Roehrs, is spending the summer in Europe .

Cleary's horticultural hall has been transformed into a retail palm and fern store for the summer and is neatly fitted up for the purpose.

Geo. J. Stumpp, of the Stumpp & Walter Co., is back from his ten days' trip to Bermuda. He reports their who died about four years ago. There are fifteen houses in all, making a total of 85,000 feet of glass.

Roses and carnations are the principal crops. Beauties are grown in small quantity, but they have not been found to pay as well as the smaller roses, and most of the space will be given to Liberty, Chatenay, Bride, Bridesmaid, and Golden Gate for the next season.

It takes 60,000 carnation plants to stock the benches. Not a large list of varieties is grown, the policy being to have only about two varieties in each color, using the best money makers. There will be two houses of Lawson this year. White Cloud and Flora Hill are the principal whites, but the latter did not do so well last year as it has heretofore. America has been found the best paying red.

In the spring about 75,000 bulbs are forced. One of the accompanying illustrations shows a bench of callas. When the cutting bench was emptied this spring it was filled up with lettuce, the crop bringing 40 cents a case and proving about the most profitable bench in the house, considering the time it was occupied.

The growing end of the business is conducted by J. P. Sinner, the elder brother. John Sinner has charge of the selling department in the Flower Growers' Market and is working a very nice business.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Trade is no more active this week than in the past fortnight, but supplies are so reduced in all lines of staple goods that better averages are resulting. On the whole, business is probably about the same as usual in the middle of July. There are still too many poor roses, but not enough of the better grades to meet the shipping demand. The teas are very small and some growers have a great deal of mildew, which renders the stock practically unsalable. The summer cuts of Beauty are coming on and some fair qualities are shown. There are large quantities of short-stemmed Liberty.

The carnation crop has been given its quietus by the few days of hot weather. The receipts are only a fraction of those of the early part of the month, and with many of the growers the cut is hardly worth shipping to market, but what good carnations are received are selling for pretty fair money, $1 to $2 being asked for the better grade of goods.

The principal over-supply at present is in sweet peas, but asters are beginning to come in heavily and it will not be long before their disposal will present another problem to the wholesalers. The peonies are gone except one crop, part of which still remains in storage. Auratum lilies are becoming more plentiful, but are selling for funeral work. Garden flowers in general are in light supply.

Various Notes.

There was a fair crowd at the Albert Fuchs auction last week and most of the stock was disposed of except such parts as Mr. Fuchs reserved for his retail trade. Among the buyers from out of town were: J. C. Rennison, Sioux City; A. L. Glaser, Dubuque; W. E. Kemble, Oskaloosa; W. A. Hartman, South Haven, Mich.; A. McFadden, Cincinnati; P. L. Larson, Fort Dodge; L. A. Whitmore, Buchtel, Ohio. The principal local buyers were the George Wittbold Company, H. R. and L. C. Hughes, Jacob Russler, John C. Ure, J. F. Kidwell & Brother and J. S. Wilson, of Vaughan's Seed Store, although a number of local store men were present and bought more or less. In general the prices received were fair, the kentias and pandanuses being in demand. The greenhouses have all been disposed of for removal from the ground. Edward Amerpohl, of Janesville, Wis., bought two houses. Nees Bros., who are starting a new place at Glen Ellyn, took two houses. Two more were sold to A. L. Whitmore, Buchtel, Ohio; three to B. Blameuser, at Niles Center, Ill., and one to F. Walker & Son, of Junction City, Kan., who are starting a branch place at Wakefield. Mr. Fuchs expects to start this week for Europe. He has retained the retail store and two houses, which he will leave in charge of F. Lautenschlager.

Julius Schnapp is in charge of T. D. Mosconosotes' new store on North State street, having succeeded George Weinhoeber.

J. B. Deamud is at Springfield as a guest of Captain A. I. Simmons, the Sixty-third street retailer, who is a member of the Seventh regiment.

J. P. Risch is on his vacation this week. Replanting operations will begin at the Evanston establishment next week.

Phil Shoup, of J. A. Budlong's, is doing jury duty this week.

Wietor Bros. will drop Perle from their list of roses for next year.

Dr. Weil, a close friend of Alderman Peter Reinberg, was last week appointed a member of the Board of Education.

Kennicott Bros. Company is still receiving some good White Cloud and Lawson carnations.

A. Lange and family will leave the latter part of this week to spend a month in Colorado.

S. Garland, Jr., is sending Percy Jones some very good Enchantress carnations.

Will Kyle, of Kennicott's, is away on his vacation. He expects to visit St. Louis.

George J. Ball, who has the Harms Park Floral Company place, is growing two acres of Benthey's Perfection aster, which is giving indications of a very fine large crop next month. There is no sign of disease in the field.

Ed Harmes, of Niles Center, died last Friday after a long illness with cancer. He was the son of Henry Harmes and 37 years of age. A widow and three children survive. The Harmes family is well known in the trade, the father and several sons having been connected with several branches of the industry. The deceased was at one time in the wholesale business with Louis Gresenz, the firm being Gresenz & Harmes.

The building in which the Flower Growers' Market is located was sold at Master's sale July 5. It is likely that the structure will soon be rebuilt, but the Market lease gives it first call on its present quarters in that event.

Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Hauswirth are at Cincinnati this week attending the gathering of Elks.

George Weinhoeber is in Colorado for a three weeks' vacation.

A special meeting of the Florists' Club was called for last evening to act on the new by-laws and other pressing matters.

The growers at Reinbergs' have a first-class base ball team. Last Sunday they were defeated, 9 to 10, by the Only Ways, one of the best of the local amateur teams.

Visitors this week were: E. G. Hill, Richmond, Ind.; S. S. Skidelsky, Philadelphia.

H. N. Bruns and family are at Pewaukee, Wis., for an outing.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

While business is very dull, it is not any duller than in midsummer a year ago. There is a little doing every day. The bright particular day from a business standpoint was Thursday of last week, when J. J. Habermehl's Sons decorated the Royal Palace at Atlantic City for the Shriners. They used gladioli, Liberties, carnations and peonies. How did they manage that? Among other flowers, asters are more plentiful and higher in price. Carnations are in demand, especially Hill and Crocker. Sweet peas are held a little more firmly. Greens are very slow sellers.

Various Notes.

Letters received here this week from Paris and from London state that H. Bayersdorfer is having a very successful trip. He will sail for home the end of July.

A meeting of the creditors of Robert Craig & Son has been called for Tuesday next, 3 p. m., at Forty-ninth and Market streets, by the assignee, John Burton.

M. Rice & Co. have put three new salesmen on the road, two for distant cities and one for this city. They promise that the finest exhibit of florists' supplies ever made will be seen under their banner at St. Louis.

H. M. Collins, of Boston, was a visitor this week.

Samuel S. Pennock speaks in glowing terms of the stock of field grown carnations that he is offering. They come from a distance and are better, even, than last year, when two experts said they were the best they had ever seen.

The Conard & Jones Co. appears to have a good thing in the Philadelphia Rambler.

Visitors say that Joseph Heacock has some of the finest palms in the market.

J. Liddon Pennock is happily recovering from a serious attack of tonsilitis, which threatened diphtheria.

Jacob Becker is tearing down the ends of two houses in Market street and will then build a show house parallel to the street.

William J. Baker was pleased with the business done last week.

Geo. Waterfield is growing a house of Beauties as a trial and has begun to cut from the new plants.

The Flower Market has been getting a fine lot of carnations, especially white, for which there is a good demand.

Charles Griffin, a nephew of H. W. Weiland, of Newtown, with whom he lived, was drowned last Wednesday. With some other boys he was swimming. He dived and struck his head on a stone and was unable to reach shore.

Mrs. S. I. Smith, of Secane, whose asters last year were the best coming to this city, has this year been unfortunate in losing most of her plants through stem-rot. Her carnations look very promising in the field.

Bowling.

The contest for places on the team to represent the Florists' Club of this city at the great bowling tournament to be held during the S. A F. convention at St. Louis next month, which was commenced on June 1, was completed Wednesday, July 13. There were seven evenings of play, three games being rolled each evening, and different alleys each time. The scoring was by points, as last year, the six highest scores in each game receiving one point. Ten men entered and eight were present the last night. The following is a summary of the contest:

Player.	No. Games.	High.	Total.	Av.	Pts.

The Market.

There has been practically no market during the past week. Flowers were abundant and demand light. Roses and carnations were each hard to move; few of the latter brought over 50 cents per 100. One first-class grower stated that he was offered $1 per 300 for his best blooms and donated a large number to charity rather than sell at such prices. Many have been cleaned out at lower rates than these.

Sweet peas have been the one flower which seemed to be in quite good demand. Prices have varied from 10 cents to 40 cents per 100, according to the call. As a rule, 25 cents is as high as good stock will reach. The pretty orange variety, Miss Wilmott, seems to be a first-class seller. No other flowers seem to be in request and the market is excessively dull.

Exhibition.

At Horticultural Hall on July 16, sweet peas were the principal feature and were largely shown. In the class for thirty-five distinct varieties there were five competitors, prizes going to W. J. Clemson, E. A. Clark, William Riggs, gardener, and W. Whitman, M. Sullivan, gardener. For twelve varieties, E. A. Clark, W. J. Clemson and Mrs. E. M. Gill won in the order named. W. N. Craig received honorable mention for the new varieties, King Edward VII., Dorothy Eckford and White Wonder. The finest varieties shown to suit the florists' trade were: Sadie Burpee, White Wonder and Dorothy Eckford, white; Salopian and King Edward VII., scarlet; Lady Grisel Hamilton, lavender; Hon. Mrs. E. Kenyon, primrose; Lovely, light pink; Prima Donna, deep pink; Miss Wilmott, orange; Prince of Wales and Lord Roseberry, rose; Blanche Ferry, pink and white.

William Riggs showed a fine lot of pentstemons, which are becoming increasingly popular. James Garthley, gardener to H. H. Rogers, received honorable mention for the double tuberous begonia, Gold of Ophir, also for a collection of the new Begonia erecta cristata. L. H. Atkins had a beautiful table of Shirley poppies and there were general displays by E. P. Shaw, Mrs. E. M. Gill and Mrs. J. B. Lawrence. The class for forty varieties and species of native plants, as usual, drew a strong entry, prizes going to Mrs. Arthur Clark, the Misses Doran, Mrs. A. S. Colbourn and Miss S. K. Buitta. The Boston Mycological Club had its first display of fungi. There was a good display of seasonable fruits and vegetables.

Various Notes.

Edward Butler, whose death recently occurred at Wellesley, was for many years gardener to Mrs. Durant, at Wellesley College. Mr. Butler, who was an Englishman by birth, was well up in his profession and used to be a frequent exhibitor at Horticultural Hall, of orchids, azaleas, acacias and other plants. He was especially successful in the cultivation of Dendrobium nobile, and used to exhibit plants of this favorite orchid carrying over 1,000 blooms. A large circle of florists and gardeners were grieved to learn of his death.

A strong northeast breeze on the evening of July 12 blew millions of brown tail moths from the infested districts into the city of Boston. The street lamps were almost white with them, and they resembled a snow storm in places. The Public Gardens and other resorts are now teeming with this pest, which, in addition to destroying the foliage on the trees, causes a very irritating and poisonous rash. The fine hairs dropping from the moths and touching the skin have created an ailment known as moth rash, for which remedies are being advertised in all our dailies. Radical measures are necessary to free Boston from this pest, which is now being quite widely distributed. Drs. Montague and Woodbury, who have been making a special study of the brown tail and gypsy moth, say the much maligned English sparrows are devouring both pests by the tens of thousands. The sparrows catch them as they fly and, devouring the bodies, drop the wings to the ground, where in some places they cover the walks.

A. Sibthorpe, formerly with J. Tailby & Son, Wellesley, who started in business for himself in that town a year ago, is building a considerable addition to his plant. Mr. Sibthorpe grows a general stock, as his retail trade is considerable.

A recent visit to Framingham found the various florists in that thriving town busy planting and preparing houses for carnations and chrysanthemums. At William Nicholson's we noted Fair Maid carnations of fine size and color. As a summer bloomer, this outclasses Enchantress, which comes almost white, as does Prosperity. Eldorado is still considered the best seller here and was being planted in benches from pots. Some fine plants of this sort were noted outdoors for summer blooming, along with the old Mrs. Fisher. The Queen and other popular sorts. Carnations are the principal feature here, but chrysanthemums are quite largely grown. The last of these were being benched. A nice lot of useful general stock for retailing was also noted.

J. T. Butterworth has a nice, compact plant centrally located in South Framingham. Two houses were still occupied with carnations. The Queen showed up as the best summer bloomer. Chrysanthemums were being planted out. Orchids are now Mr. Butterworth's hobby and he owns the best commercial collection of these in New England. Cattleyas looked particularly well. Some fine specimens of gigas, labiata, trianæ, Percivaliana and other standard sorts were noted and all had greatly improved since our previous visit. Laelia anceps and L. autumnalis, dendrobiums, Cœlogyne cristata and Cypripedium insigne were noted in quantity and all were very promising. Plants are all grown in fern fibre and sphagnum. Bulbous stock is extensively grown here, about half a million being forced annually, but Mr. Butterworth plans to reduce these as his orchids increase.

S. J. Goddard is now comfortably located in his new place in Framingham. His newly completed houses, which are 28x135 each, are principally planted with carnations, including considerable batches of Mrs. M. A. Patten, Flamingo, White Lawson, Lady Bountiful and other novelties. All stock looked well. Mr. Goddard has just installed a ninety horse-power boiler, which should keep his houses comfortable.

Alexander McKay, at Mrs. A. W. Spencer's, has gone over to the florists' side, handling a promiscuous stock. His divisions of chrysanthemums, which included all the best novelties, looked well. Orchids are also dabbled in a little. He says he is through with exhibiting, as it caused him too much nervous worry. This is to be regretted, as Boston has no better grower of specimen chrysanthemums and blooms.

J. Tailby & Son have had numerous visitors the past week to see their display of yellow callas. The variety, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt (C. albo-maculata x C. Elliottiana) is of a deep primrose color. The leaves are beautifully variegated and the plant a vigorous grower for either pot culture or massing in beds. It should be very popular. Messrs. Tailby have some thousands of flowering sized bulbs and rows of seeds seemed to be germinating as freely as peas. Although some tempting offers have been made for the stock, it will probably be held until it can be marketed at a popular price.

Alfred Ackerman, instructor in the Yale school of forestry, will begin his work as state forester of Massachusetts in August. Mr. Ackerman graduated from the University of Georgia in 1898. He studied German forestry methods some time and graduated from Yale forestry school in 1902. He prepared plans for the celebrated Austin Corbin park of 25,000 acres in southern New Hampshire.

Colonel Joseph H. Woodford, for many years chairman of the committee of arrangements at Horticultural Hall, is critically ill.

Mrs. E. M. Gill, the well known florist of Medford, reports the gypsy moth pest as being terrible there. Hardy roses and perennials are being eaten up and even greenhouse stock is not exempt.

W. N. CRAIG.

BUFFALO.

Various Notes.

As was expected, business has dropped to a low ebb since the first of the month. Our wealthy citizens follow the fashion of larger cities and seek the mountain and seashores, or make a trip across the herring pond, but they need not leave home in search of a better climate, for nothing can be finer than the breezes off Lake Erie. No excessive heat, no mosquitoes, little politics and ideal weather, a great contrast to last summer.

Buffalo lost a noble citizen last week in the death of Robert B. Adam, head of the old dry goods firm of Adam, Meldrum & Anderson. As chairman of the great work, the grade crossing commission, he has left an enduring monument, insisting that the commission should serve without a cent of remuneration, and not a breath of corruption or even favoritism has ever been uttered in connection with their work involving millions. But this is only one of his many good works and to give them all here would be out of place. Oh, that our great cities could have such men for mayor, or better still for aldermen. When it is considered an honor to represent your ward in a great city, then our leading, independent, good citizens will be willing to serve and we shall be approaching a business-like, pure, municipal government. Now too many of our city fathers are merely professional politicians, and is it any wonder that graft and boodle are so often heard of? We prosper and are blessed in spite of this affliction, but our city government will some day be different. It will come in time, when many of us have ceased worrying about taxes.

It may interest some of the readers of the REVIEW to know that Mr. Adam was the possessor of many original manuscripts of Robert Burns. His Johnsoniana was the most valuable in the world. His Burnsiana was not as extensive as that of our friend, William R. Smith, of Washington, which is the third largest in the world and most complete, but he spent thousands in autograph letters and original manuscripts of Burns' poems. Among many others in his collection is the original manuscript of "Tam O'Shanter" and "A Man's a Man for a' That."

There was a very elaborate and beautiful display of flowers at the funeral and the many designs were arranged at the altar of the church by some lady friends far more artistically than any professional florist could do it. W. J. Palmer had several large and costly designs. A pall of lavender and white sweet peas was very beautiful and an immense wreath on a stand. Anderson sent a five-foot wreath which I thought was rich. Half of it was American Beauty roses and the other half lily of the valley. Designs came from Boston and New York. Altogether it was a beautiful sight and, although there is a tendency to overdo the flower business at funerals, they were so tastefully arranged that it gave one the impression that it was proper and fitting for the occasion and would have pleased this great, good man could he have seen it.

William F. Kasting was a delegate to the St. Louis convention from his congressional district and shouted so long and loud when the name of Parker was mentioned that we don't expect his voice to be fully restored much before he meets John Westcott at St. Louis again. He expects to shout a little louder on the night of the first Tuesday in November, and it would not surprise us a little bit if he has good occasion to.

While we hear from some quarters of a scarcity of rain, we have frequent showers, rather too frequent for keeping the weeds down. It has been a most favorable time for carnations and they never looked better. Planting has begun. At Corfu a big house was planted July 8 and they never looked over their shoulder. This is not cultural notes, so I can dip a minute into carnations. What a change in time of planting! The end of September was considered right twenty-five years ago. Then gradually it worked up to the end of August. Then early in August, and now the best, most uniform and splendid lot of carnations I saw anywhere last year was at Trenton Falls, N. Y., and they were lifted from the field early in July. It was about December 15 that I saw these houses and you know that if your plants are loaded with splendid flowers at that date, you are decidedly in it.

There are many points of advantage with those who plant in May or June from 3-inch or 3½-inch pots, as so ably explained by that modest phenomena, Peter Fisher, and now practiced by many, yet it seems that if you can get them out in the field early in May and give them two months outside they do better in the field during those two months than they will in the hothouses, and by early July the roots have spread but little. Not a fibre is lost, and they go right on growing. Plants that were put on the benches about June 10 from 3½-inch pots don't look near as healthy and vigorous as those lifted from the field a week ago.

We don't hear much St. Louis talk locally, but I think we shall have a bowling team. It is pleasant to hear that Mr. Tesson will have charge of the shooting. That assures us a good time. The writer has fired off twenty-five shells today at crow blackbirds that are devouring our cherries. We bagged twenty-seven birds in twenty-five shots, mostly sitting. I mean the birds were sitting, not I.

I wish a shotgun with dust shot would destroy the aster beetle. This pest has again made its appearance in quantity. The crown of the plant wilts and dies. The little beetle is very visible, but knows enough to descend to the ground directly you handle the plant, and the slight damage done to the stem will hardly account for the sudden wilting and drying up of the leaves. We have tried Paris green and hellebore, but not with much success. Please give us a remedy that will exterminate this lively little wretch.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

THE peony Richardson's Rubra Superba has made an appreciable advance in popular esteem this season.

THE pecan industry is growing rapidly and many southern nurserymen find the call for pecan trees a large part of their business.

THE Association of American Cemetery Superintendents meets at Chicago August 24 to 26. There will be a large attendance.

THERE will be large plantings of native rhododendrons, azaleas and kalmias this fall, according to inquiries received by southern shippers.

THE hickory is a tree which is no longer sought, the results having been unsatisfactory in almost all localities where it has been planted.

PLAN the thinning of trees and shrubs and, before the foliage falls, mark those to be removed. The cutting out can be done at any convenient time.

IT is reported that the call for American elm for park work last spring pretty well cleaned up stocks except in one or two large nurseries making a specialty of this tree.

BLACK APHIS.

Could you offer a suggestion as to the best means of killing, as I term it, black aphis? They appear on clematis and hardy chrysanthemums and have infested the plum trees. I have sprayed these plants with water and covered them with tobacco dust, but it seems to do no good. My Jackmanni vine was infested with black aphis. I sprayed with tobacco dust and washed it off the next day. I gave them two applications and the result was that I have killed about three-fourths of the large, old vine. My Rudbeckia Golden Glow has been infested with a red aphis. A local bugologist tells me that this is the same aphis that has attacked the chrysanthemum and the clematis, but the color is due to the plants upon which they feed.

W. W. D.

We would suggest the use of kerosene emulsion for clearing out black, red or green aphis. It can be made as follows: Dissolve one-half pound of any hard soap in one gallon of boiling water; add two gallons of kerosene and churn well with a pump for a few minutes. Use a wooden or earthen vessel. Dilute fifteen times before applying. This emulsion is also very useful for scale insects, for which it may be diluted five times. Whale oil soap will also be found effectual for the pests named. Directions for use are on every package. Sulpho-tobacco soap we can also recommend. An 8-ounce cake is sufficient for four gallons of water. The kerosene emulsion will keep some time but is better fresh. We use both this and the whale oil soap on trees fifty to eighty feet high for aphides and plant lice with best results.

THE READERS' CORNER.

A Spite Fence.

I would like to get advice from some florist who has had experience about a board spite fence. I have been in the florist business for about twenty-four years in Winton Place. Two years ago the Cincinnati Chemical Company built a large factory on the west side of my place. Last winter they bought 200 feet more ground on the east side. They want to build a switch track from the Baltimore & Ohio railway to their factory, and to do this they have to get the right of way through my place. They offered but a trifle and I refused to let them go through. Now, to spite me, they put up a tight board fence eight feet high, a distance of 235 feet along my place. My greenhouses are built low, each 160 feet long, and are one foot from the line of the fence. It shades the first greenhouse so badly in the winter season that I cannot grow anything in it. I told my lawyer of this and wanted to get an injunction against the Cincinnati Chemical Company to prevent them from building the fence, but he said he could not do anything for me, because he says people can build fences as high as they want and there is no law that can stop them. This fence was put up the latter part of May.

Will some brother florist tell me what to do to get this fence down, so as not to shade my glass? Would like to hear from one who has had experience in this line.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The week just past was very quiet in the cut flower line. At the wholesale houses very little shipping trade is going on, and about the only thing that keeps the trade alive now is funeral work, and even that seems to be slow. There are very few social affairs given at the World's Fair grounds just now, and so we are in summer stillness, which gives us plenty of time to look after convention affairs.

In the market there are a lot of roses of fair quality just now—in fact, too many for the demand. Brides, Maids and Kaiserins are plentiful and fairly good stock can be bought for $3 and $4 per 100. Liberty, Meteor and short Beauties run about the same in price. Very few good long Beauties are seen. In carnations, the market is somewhat short of fancy stock and not any too many of the common grades. The average price is about $1.50 per 100, though a few fancy bring $2. The common grades do not bring over 50 cents to $1 per 100.

Sweet peas were a little scarce the past week, owing to the heavy rains, which spoiled thousands of them. A few dry days will again see them plentiful. The outdoor flowers, such as gladioli, asters, tuberoses and cornflowers, are plentiful. Some excellent lily of the valley is going begging for want of demand. Smilax is in demand, and so are other greens, with fancy ferns a little scarce.

Club Meeting.

The July meeting of the Florists' Club was large and harmonious. The afternoon was warm, but thirty-five members were on hand. After the regular routine work, the chairmen of the different S. A. F. committees reported that all arrangements were completed for receiving and entertaining the S. A. F. members during the convention next month. The applications for membership were numerous. The following were elected: C. Winters, W. E. Robinson, John Nyflot, Charlie Schonelle, Arthur Y. Ellison, Nic Himmer, John Himmer, J. S. Secketer, H. M. Schisler, George S. Walters, Geo. M. Ostertag and Harry Young, making fourteen in all. This makes the membership of the club ninety-one. Nine new applications were promised by next meeting, making 100 members by the opening of the S. A. F. convention.

The nomination of officers resulted as follows: For president, Otto G. Koenig and Chas. A. Juengel; for vice-president, Carl Beyer, W. J. Pilcher and Henry Ostertag; for secretary Emil Schray; for treasurer, F. H. Meinhardt and J. W. Dunford; three trustees, Theo. Miller, George Windler, Fred C. Weber, E. W. Guy, Theo. Klockenkemper and Frank Weber.

James W. Dunford read an essay on "Greenhouse Building and Help," which was well received and quite a discussion followed. At the next meeting of the club, August 11, the election of officers will take place. The date will be just four days before the opening of the S. A. F. convention, when the largest attendance of the year is expected.

Various Notes.

William Ward Tailby and bride, of Wellesley, Mass., spent a week of their honeymoon in St. Louis. Mr. Tailby found time to call on the trade.

A. F. J. Baur, of Indianapolis, Ind., whose notes are so much looked after in the REVIEW, in company with Mrs. Baur, visited the World's Fair last week. They also made the rounds of the trade.

After the club meeting on last Thursday a special bowling match was arranged between Theo. Miller, Carl Beyer, C. A. Kuehn and Frank Ellis. Kuehn and Ellis won all four games. Theo. Klockenkemper, who accompanied them, showed some ability as a bowler.

Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Ellis returned Wednesday night from a week's fishing trip at Whitehall, Ill., and report a big catch of fish every day.

THE S. A. F. PROGRAM.

Since our last issue the program of the S. A. F. meeting at St. Louis has been altered in one or two unimportant details. The meeting of the Florists' Hail Association will be held at two o'clock on Thursday and the Carnation Society will meet at four o'clock the same day. This will be while the shooting is in progress.

EUROPEAN flower seed crops in general promise well.

D. E. WITTPENN, of McHutchison & Co., New York, is in Europe.

REPORTS continue to come to hand of damage to the sweet pea crop in California.

THE harvesting of onion sets is in progress on early fields in the Chicago district.

REPORTS from the Pacific coast are to the effect that pole beans are likely to make a good crop.

THE onion maggot is doing serious injury to the crop throughout the marsh sections of Ohio and Indiana.

THE Leonard Seed Company has finished harvesting its Pearl onion sets. It is considered an early harvest for such a late spring.

VISITED CHICAGO: J. T. Huntington and T. V. Page, of Huntington & Page, Indianapolis; Frank Rue, with J. C. Murray, Peoria, Ill.

WORD has been received from the Harry N. Hammond Seed Company that Mr. Hammond is no longer connected with the business.

THE dry, hot weather of the past week will shorten the onion set crop at Chicago many thousand bushels. It will add to what is termed quality, however.

MESSRS. HUNTINGTON & PAGE, of Indianapolis, who are somewhat interested in onion sets, inspected the Chicago set fields, in company with S. F. Leonard, July 19.

EXTREME dry weather at some of the bean growing points is causing uneasiness. The present is a very critical time, as the crop is just along where weather conditions will either make or break it.

THE World's Fair notices have led to the belief that the great floral clock is one of the works of the landscape department, but, instead, it is the exhibit of the St. Louis Seed Co. It is probably the most widely discussed exhibit on the grounds.

THE blight, or aphis, or whatever it is, is causing the pickle vines to dry up just as they did last year. This will cause the same shortage of pickles and also of the seed crop as has prevailed the past two years unless a remedy of some sort is discovered speedily.

THE general chairman of the membership committee of the American Breeders' Association, Eugene D. Funk, Bloomington, Ill., is progressing with his campaign for a large membership for that new organization. A life membership has been received from Philip de Vilmorin, Paris, France. Annual membership is $1 a year, life membership $20.

CORN TO PLANT.

Referring to recent notes on this subject, published in these columns, P. G. Holden, professor of agronomy at the Iowa Agricultural College and Experiment Station, writes:

"Our experiments would all indicate that the butts and tips should be shelled off. First, because it is impossible to secure a good stand with any planter when they are shelled in with the rest of the corn. Second, even if the stand should be secured, they give a lower yield of corn. Last year we shelled off about an inch from the tips and about two-thirds of an inch from the butts and then planted these by hand, putting three kernels in each hill of both the butts, middles and tips. The yields were fifty-nine bushels for the butts, sixty-six and two-thirds bushels for the middles and fifty-five bushels from the tip kernels. It so happens that one or two of the varieties of corn that are best filled out at the butts and tips, have had the butts and tips removed for some forty or fifty years. I will say further, that there seems to be no good evidence at hand to show that corn would be improved by leaving the butts and tips on, in fact there is every reason to believe that it would tend to reduce the vitality of the corn somewhat."

C. G. Hopkins, professor of agronomy of the University of Illinois and Experiment Station, writes:

"Investigations relating to the selection of seed corn sustain the opinion which I think is commonly held by Illinois seed corn breeders, namely, that the only good reason for discarding tip and butt kernels is that they will plant more uniformly and thus insure a more even stand, on account of the kernels from the main part of the ear being all about the same size while the tip and butt kernels are commonly irregularly shaped and of a different size."

MILLEPEDS.

Enclosed find a little box containing a few worms which have been giving us quite a little trouble for nearly a year in our greenhouse, especially in the smilax. At present there are thousands of very small ones in the smilax bed and quite a number of the plants are dying. We do not find that they trouble the plants above the surface of the bed. They do not appear to work during the day but are very much in evidence after dark, climbing over the benches and other parts of the house. Can you tell us what to apply to rid the house of them? N. C. G.

The worms in question are variously known as millepeds, myriapods, or thousand-legs, the scientific name of which is julus, there being several varieties of this species. This pest is quite a common one in greenhouses and sometimes becomes very plentiful. While they have been credited with living upon decayed vegetable matter only, yet I believe that they also attack living vegetable matter, such as the young fronds of adiantums and other tender organisms, and it is quite probable that the millepeds have troubled the smilax also.

The best remedy that I have discovered, and that was discovered accidentally, is thorough fumigating with aphis punk, this preparation being used in the proportion of six to eight rolls of the punk to a house 24x100 feet, and the house being fumigated on two successive evenings, with the result that very few live millepeds could be found afterward. W. H. TAPLIN.

SPIDER ON ARAUCARIAS.

I am sending a few branches cut from my Norfolk Island pines and would like to know what the trouble is. I have heretofore been successful with these plants, but now they are all more or less affected. The branches seem to dry up, turn brown and die. M. R.

An examination of the araucaria branchlets that accompanied this query seems to show that the plant has been kept in a warm house and in rather too dry an atmosphere, under which treatment it has been attacked by red spider, the marks of this insect being abundant on the leaves of the specimens.

Araucaria excelsa enjoys moderately cool treatment, with abundant moisture, a night temperature during the winter of 50 degrees being better for this plant than warm house culture.

The plant may be cleaned of red spider and also of thrips, some of which may be present, by dipping two or three times at intervals of a week in moderately strong tobacco water, to which has been added a thumbpot of flowers of sulphur to a bucket of the tobacco extract. A similar potful of rose leaf extract of tobacco to a bucket of water would provide a solution quite strong enough for this purpose, this being a more reliable way of preparing tobacco water than the old method of steeping or boiling the stems. After dipping, the plant should be laid down on its side in order to avoid the mixture running down the stem to the roots, the tobacco and sulphur preparation being liable to do injury to the soil. THE ASTER BEETLE.

One of the best known aster pests is the slender, lively black beetle (Epicauta Pennsylvanica) which attacks the blossoms. If left unchecked they soon destroy every flower when at all prevalent. Thorough hand picking has been our best remedy and if done every day is not a great task even in a large bed.—Geo. E. Stone, in bulletin of Hatch Experiment Station.

Elmira, N. Y.—The United States Cut Flower Co. had its Meteors all planted last week and now the Beauties are in, with good progress being made on the teas. J. J. Curran, the superintendent, is visiting Buffalo, Toronto and Brampton this week.

KANSAS CITY, KAN.—J. S. Short lost his two-months-old daughter July 11 and has the sympathy of all his acquaintances.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—There is much complaint that thieves are despoiling the flower beds in all sections of the city, and there has been much more bedding out than usual. Some of the florists are anxious that an example be made of an offender, for it is not generally understood how serious is this vandalism. A state law makes it grand larceny to steal growing plants of any kind.

INDOOR GRAPERIES.

Making the Borders.

In a former article I gave my ideas regarding what I considered the best size and style of house. The next thing to consider is the making of the borders. In this the first essential point is to provide proper drainage. If the situation is high and dry and the subsoil of a sandy nature the natural drainage might be sufficient, but if there is any danger of the water not having free passage, drains will have to be constructed. The bottom of the border should be made firm and so constructed that it will be highest in the middle and sloping gradually toward the outer edges. About nine inches of broken brick or similar material should be placed on the bottom, this in turn being blinded with old lime rubbish if it can be procured. Under ordinary conditions two drains, one along each of the outer edges of the border, will be sufficient, but it may be necessary with certain subsoils to have drains running from the center of the border at intervals of every eight or ten feet and leading into the side drains. These latter should have sufficient fall to insure the carrying away of all surplus water. In low, damp situations it may even be necessary to cement the bottom of the border to insure against stagnation and to prevent the roots getting down into poor soil, where the moisture in such a situation would naturally draw them. Where cementing is done the bottom should be constructed as recommended above and the same amount of broken brick, etc., used. There is always a possibility of having too much of a good thing and it is quite possible to have too much drainage, as we want the borders to retain the necessary amount of moisture so I would not recommend cementing unless the situation calls for it.

In preparing the compost for filling up the border much will depend on the quality and nature of the soil procurable. Both its mechanical and chemical composition may have to be regulated. Should the soil be of a stiff, binding nature a liberal amount of charcoal and lime rubbish will have to be used to make it freer and less retentive. If, on the other hand, the sod contains plenty of fibre, and the nature of the soil be free and open, nothing but manure need be added; the lighter the soil of course the more manure will be necessary.

An ideal soil for grape vines is a good fibrous loam, neither too light nor too heavy.

Regarding manures, the main object should be to use only such as will make the compost as lasting as possible. Soft manures, such as from the barn yard, should be avoided, as they only act as a souring agent and the virtue they contain is spent before the vines are large enough to utilize it. The ingredients they contain can be supplied later in the form of liquid. Use half-inch bone and horn shavings in proportions of about one ton of bone and 100 pounds of shavings to fifty team loads of soil. There is no necessity for making up the compost any length of time before it is to be used, but it should be well chopped up and the ingredients mixed before being filled into the border. The sod should be taken up just the same as if it were to be used for roses or carnations and the more fibre it contains the better it will be. A layer of sod intact should be placed green side down over the drainage to keep the latter clear until the whole has settled and it is a good plan to have the soil three or four inches higher than the intended level, so as to allow for settling. I don't approve of packing the soil in any way but simply fill it in as above and let it settle of its own weight. If it should settle a little below the level it is easy to add an inch or two as needed.

A theory that is advanced by some growers is to make the border in sections in place of making it all at once. They advocate planting the vines in a section three or four feet wide and adding other sections of a similar width as the growth of the roots requires it, claiming that it saves a loss of manurial elements which would occur by the compost or that part of it in the center of the border lying idle so long before the roots are strong enough to reach it. Though the theory may be all right to a certain extent, I have never seen the advantages claimed for it proven by practical results, and prefer to make the border all at once rather than have it done by patch work. If good, strong vines are planted they will pretty well occupy the whole border the second season after planting and, when the border is made all at once, there is no restriction whatever to the roots.

W. S. CROYDON.

LETTUCE SOIL.

I am emptying my carnation benches and would like to know if the soil in which the carnations grew last season would be good for lettuce if piled outdoors until the latter part of October, with a fourth of manure added?

L. H. W.

Under ordinary conditions the soil from your carnation benches ought to be all right if mixed as you suggest and exposed to the weather until the latter part of October. We have often used old carnation soil for lettuce under similar conditions with good results, only in adding the manure make sure that it is well rotted, as by adding fresh manure you might be adding properties, such as ammonia, which the soil already contains, in excess of what are needed. If liquid or other manures have been applied to your carnation benches, which in all likelihood has been the case, the soil is almost sure to be overcharged with certain ingredients which only a chemical analysis would reveal. Most of us apply manures by rule of thumb and can only judge by the health of our crop whether we are overdosing or not. But a soil that would produce good carnations might not be altogether suitable for lettuce, their softer nature making them rather susceptible to damage through an excess of certain chemical properties in the soil.

If your carnations have been heavily fed it would be better to leave your soil over winter, so that it would not only get washed out but be subjected to the sweetening influence of frost. But if heavy feeding has not been given, then there is little danger of excess of chemical properties in the soil and I would consider it quite safe to use as you suggest. The soil should not be piled too deep and would be benefited by being turned over several times while lying out of doors. W. S. CROYDON.

READING, PA.—Harry Seiders, a former employe of Hoskin & Giles, is under arrest on a charge of having burglarized the place July 9.

PEORIA, ILL.—The local florists have agreed to join the movement for closing all stores on Wednesday afternoons during July and August.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We are having another spell of cool, damp weather, something rather unusual at this season of the year. The effect has been good on both roses and carnations and they have better color and substance than we usually have during this month. Such varieties as Lawson, that are always full of thrip at this time, have been brought well up to color and length of stem. Flora Hill is in full crop in most of the greenhouses and there is no scarcity of white in consequence. The best, fancy varieties are selling at $3 per hundred and the standard sorts bring about $2, while Portia, Scott and Joost can be had at a less price. Many of the rose growers are commencing to dry up their houses and very small cutting is the result. Bride, Maid, Testout, Liberty and Carnot are selling at from $3 to $4 per hundred and Beauties, although the majority of them are poor, are selling at from 75 cents to $2 per dozen. Sweet peas are very good and very plentiful and still bring 50 cents per dozen bunches. Great bunches of goldenrod are being brought in from the country and it makes a very good showing as a decorative flower. A few asters are in market. There has been quite an acreage of asters planted this season and from what I have seen, and from reports by the growers, they are in good shape, and will be as fine and as plentiful as they were last season. This branch of the business has passed almost entirely into the hands of the Chinese gardeners and they sell them at prices that exclude almost anyone else from going into aster or chrysanthemum growing.

Various Notes.

Miss Wollenberg is spending a week's vacation in Los Gatos.

Podesta & Baldocchi are having quite an improvement made to their store in the shape of new and up-to-date show windows.

Thos. Cox arrived from his visit to the eastern states this week. He had a very pleasant trip.

J. T. Shephard, of Oakland, has leased several acres of ground on Prospect avenue with the intention of running it as a nursery as an adjunct to his florist's store.

W. M. Frodden, superintendent of parks of the town of Alameda, has been authorized by the town trustees to import half a million of the Australian lady bird to destroy the cottony cushion scale. G.

HARDY ANNUALS.

For a grower who has plenty of water in the summer, there is considerable money to be made in cultivating hardy annuals. At this season of the year, when greenhouse roses and carnations, especially the former, are not at their best and when there is always a demand for cheap flowers, it is no trouble to have a succession of showy blooms that will go a long way toward paying expenses in the dull season. One of the most satisfactory plants to grow is the Coreopsis lanceolata. This is a perennial, although the best results are obtained from plants that are grown from seed each year. We plant the seed in February and transplant the young plants in the open ground in April. The soil should be well worked up and plentifully manured and given plenty of water. By keeping it well spaded quantities of big, long-stemmed flowers will be produced until late in the fall. The seed pods should be picked off every few weeks to get the full benefit of the plants. Coreopsis bicolor is an annual and is used extensively in decorating, but it is not of such merit as the other variety mentioned.

Gaillardias are grown best from cuttings, as the flowers from plants grown from seed seem to deteriorate easily. Select a good double-flowered plant and the cuttings are easily rooted in February. Long stems and good flowers are, as in the case of the coreopsis, only to be had on the youngest stock. I do not find that the gaillardia is particularly fond of rich or heavy soil and it can be grown in almost any location.

Canterbury bells I have found, when well grown, both the purple and white, were quickly bought up by the retailers. They are of easy growth from seed. This is a flower that has been neglected by the growers, but it is very decorative and a good keeper and the long spikes are an agreeable change from gladioli, a flower that is being grown here in vast quantities.

There is some demand for double dahlias, especially the white varieties. They begin to bloom early in May and until the asters get plentiful several months later, they pay very well. There is not such a demand for stocks the last few years as there was before asters and chrysanthemums became so popular. For many years they were used almost entirely as a foundation in funeral designs, but now only around Decoration day or in the winter season are stocks in any demand. If the plants are raised from seed in time to get them planted by the first of October in the open ground, and the season is not too wet afterwards, it is possible to get continuous pickings of this valuable annual throughout December and January, when they come in very handy after the chrysanthemum season is over.

Candytuft is another flower that at one time was very popular with retailers, but is now grown for Decoration day trade almost exclusively. Sweet sultan, when well grown, is a desirable annual and a good seller. Marigolds are hardly ever seen in the shop windows. Likewise mignonette and daisies have lost their charm and are no longer in demand. Sweet peas, asters, chrysanthemums and violets are entirely in the hands of specialists and the ordinary grower does not handle them to any extent, but this has only been the rule for the past ten years or thereabouts, as it was the custom before that time for every grower to have a patch of each of them.

Violets always were, and always will be, one of the best paying crops that it is possible to grow. But although the novice always looks on this little flower as an easy proposition to raise, it is one of the most difficult to handle at a profit. Eternal vigilance is necessary during the whole year to have the plants in such shape that they will be remunerative. The right location and soil-moisture in the summer and not too much water in the winter, natural protection from extremes during the coldest weather and immunity from red spider and rust in the dry season, are among the many items to consider when about to go into violet culture.

Pansy flowers are not used in the stores here, the plant being confined entirely to garden decoration. Bachellor's buttons are grown by the Italian gardeners and calla lilies grow wild in everyone's back yard in California. They are in some demand during Easter and Decoration week, but the public will not buy them at other times. Both peonies and iris are good paying crops to handle. Neither requires any special treatment and the flowers are usually in good demand at very fair prices. G.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

This is the week of the Elks' great reunion. The city is gay with flags and white and purple bunting and the streets are thronged with strangers. A fine program of entertainments has been planned and there will be great things doing. All of this has helped out the florists' business a good deal and the demand for all kinds of stock, but especially the best quality, is first class.

Carnations have advanced in price several points and are very scarce at that. They will be virtually out of the market in a few days. Roses also are scarce, but some of very fair quality are to be had. Some very good Beauties are coming in and they are quickly disposed of. Brides and Maids are poor, but they sell anyway. Liberties and Kaiserin continue good and much in demand.

Sweet peas are not quite so much in evidence, but there are still more of them than can be disposed of. Some fine gladioli are in the market and they sell well. A few lilies are also good property. Some first class asters are coming in and with the extra demand this week they will be mighty handy.

Various Notes.

There were several openings of amusement places and cafes the past week and many flowers were used. Julius Baer made a very effective outdoor decoration for one new cafe. He used very heavy festooning of oak leaves and it was very pretty.

Theo. Bock, of Hamilton, is an Elk and he will be in this city with the home lodge. Each member in the parade Wednesday will wear a pink carnation.

Fred W. Kelsey, of Orange, N. J., member of the park extension board of that city, was a visitor this week. He was shown over our parks by Supt. Critchell and expressed himself as greatly pleased with the amount of work that was being done on the small amount of money that is allowed for park maintenance. C. J. Ohmer.

Fergus Falls, Minn.—S. N. Mehlin is building a cement lined cellar under an addition to his greenhouse establishment which he proposes to use as a celery bleaching department.

Gunnar Teilmann is building two new houses, for carnations and chrysanthemums, one 16x90, the other 16x75, using material from the Foley Mfg. Co., Chicago. His chrysanthemums are in fine shape, a bench and a half of the new pink, Wm. Duckham, being especially good. Mr. Teilmann says that for habit of growth Duckham is the finest mum he has ever seen and if the blooms come up to expectations this fall there is going to be an enormous sale for it, larger even than for Eaton and Appleton. Mr. Teilmann has a bench of the early Monrovia that looks good.

J. W. Bernard, after a little trouble, has renewed the lease on his place for five years and has things in good shape again.

F. W. Herleman is preparing to put up an even-span house 100 feet long. Cyrus Wilson will also add a small house to his place.

Ed Bissell has left the Marion Floral Co. and is now in Rushville. A Mr. Councilman, formerly of Knightstown, is his successor.

The spring business was good with everyone here and we now hope for a prosperous fall and winter. G.

ASHTABULA, OHIO.

F. C. Bail, who has been manager of the Ashtabula Greenhouse Co. since it built its plant at Bunker Hill some years ago, has sold his interest and severed his connection with the concern. It is a stock company in which F. N. Stone and J. H. Goddard hold the principal interest. W. Rogers is now the manager.

Mr. Bail has bought three and one-half acres of land and is building four houses 22x175 feet each. He has bought two sixty horse-power boilers and expects to be ready for business on his own account in the early fall. Lettuce will be his principal crop.

Several of the lettuce growers in this vicinity are busy building additions to their glass, all having had a profitable season.

Tong & Weeks say that cut flower and plant business has been good, but that the usual summer quiet is now at hand.

AUBURN, N. Y.—H. M. Hills is adding two houses to his range, each 10x152. One is for smilax and asparagus, the other for carnations. One house, 20x100, is planted to Brides and Maids and another is being put in shape for carnations. The past year was a prosperous one for Mr. Hills.

HEATING.

I have a house 18x75 and ten feet high and one 12x75 and eight feet high. These are heated by an eight horsepower upright boiler. I have it lying flat, fire underneath, smoke returning through flues, in which position it has done good service. On the west side of the house I have three strings of 1½-inch to 1¼-inch run in expansion tank, with a 1-inch return to boiler. In the south side there are two 2-inch pipes reduced to 1½-inch also in expansion tank, 1-inch pipe to boiler. Could I improve the system if I should give it a large return pipe to the boiler, therefore causing a quicker flow? The small house has only three lines of 1½ to 1¼-inch reduced in tank, with 1-inch pipe to feed boiler. If I put in 1¼-inch pipe from tank to boiler would it not give a better flow? F. I.

I regret to say I do not understand the system which has been employed in piping these houses. I judge, however, from the description that an open circuit has been employed with an expansion tank or pipe at the far end of the house. If I am correct, the system can be improved by modifying it so as to employ the 2-inch pipes as feeders for several 1¼-inch returns placed in coils under the benches or on the side walls as may be desired. A single expansion tank placed ten or twelve feet above the highest point in the heating system and connected by a 1-inch pipe to the main return close to the boiler should care for the expansion in the entire plant and at the same time increase the pressure on the system so as to cause the water to attain a higher heat and to circulate more quickly. The flow pipes may be placed under the ridge of the house and the water caused to return through several 1¼-inch pipes, or the flow pipe itself may be carried under the bench and used to supply several returns, as in the other case. In your latitude, the house 18x75 feet, to maintain a temperature of 50° at night in severe weather, should be provided with a 2-inch flow, returning to the boiler through ten runs of 1¼-inch pipe, or what would be better still, two 2-inch risers, each supplying four lines of 1¼-inch pipe. The smaller house, 12x75 feet should have a 2-inch feed pipe returning its water through seven 1¼-inch returns to maintain the same temperature during cold weather.

TABLE DECORATIONS.

A London florist not long ago made a fine effect by decorating a dinner table entirely with La France roses, the dinner service being pink Sevres, matching the flowers perfectly. Old china lends itself to this purpose readily, as was proved at the dinner party given by Baron and Baroness Alphone de Rothschild recently in their fine mansion, Rue Saint Florentin. The flowers were the orchids for which the baron's conservatories at Ferrieres are celebrated, and the golden and mauve tints of the blooms were thrown into harmonious relief by the pieces of green Sevres china placed on the table.

ESCANABA, MICH.—C. Peterson & Sons are building a greenhouse 22x100, the material for which was obtained of the A. Dietsch Co., Chicago.

PLEASE MENTION THE REVIEW WHEN WRITING ANY OF THESE ADVERTISERS.

PIPING.

How many 1-inch pipes are required to heat a house 10x36, four and one-half feet to the eaves, seven feet to the ridge? The house runs north and south and is in no way protected against winds. The temperature desired is 55° when it is 15° below zero outside.

H. & S.

If the house in question is to be heated with steam at five pounds pressure it will require twelve 1-inch pipes to supply the desired temperature during cold weather. If hot water is to be used it is not advisable to attempt to heat the house with 1-inch pipe. If, however, the 1-inch pipe cannot be exchanged for larger size, say 1½-inch or 2-inch and hot water is to be employed, then nineteen pipes running the length of the house should be provided. With 2-inch pipe, however, the same work would be done with eleven pipes. In other words, it takes over 700 feet of 1-inch pipe to equal 390 feet of 2-inch pipe for hot water heating purposes. L. C. C.

PAINTING PIPES.

Please give us the name of a paint that can be used on the heating pipes without injury to plants and still be a preventive of rust. G. W. D.

On general principles it is not desirable to paint or otherwise cover radiation pipes. Where pipes pass through compartments in which heat is not desired, painting and otherwise protecting them is a direct means of preventing radiation and economizing in fuel. Pipes passing under the ridge and those which branch from a riser to feed radiators beneath benches may often be painted to advantage. The paint best suited for this purpose is the black asphaltum paint used by engineers for painting boiler fronts and other heated metal parts. This paint has no injurious effect upon plants if the painting is done while the pipes are cool and it has time to dry before the heat is turned on. L. C. C.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. DEPTH OF SOIL ON BENCHES.

Referring to Mr. Baur's article July 14, on the best depth for soil in carnation growing, my opinion is that three to four inches of firm soil is ample up to April 1, when a little more should be added, if not mulched previously, to prevent too rapid drying out. With three inches of soil plants will dry out more evenly than with four or five inches, and they can be fed with less danger, especially through the winter months. It is in the spring that the extra inch comes in handy. Therefore, I conclude that if blooms are wanted as late as July and August, use at least four to five inches of soil. If you throw out and replant early, use less.

I think water costs more than soil to the average grower, so that there are several things to take into consideration besides cost of soil. We use fencing for side boards and level off the bench evenly with soil. This settles to about four inches in a few months, allowing room for top dressing or manure watering if desired. Continual watering washes the soil through the benches, so that in spring about three and one-half inches of soil is left to which, of course, is added the loose top dressing.

As the benches by this time are full of roots, about April 1 an extra one-half or three-quarters of an inch of additional fresh soil, one-half manure, will help the plants greatly. Did you ever notice how a top dressing of about a half inch of old cow manure and a half inch of soil helps out roses during the hot months? Why shouldn't it be equally as good for carnations? It isn't necessary, however, if you have proper arrangements for manure watering, as it requires a lot of labor. Still, what are the results unless you put in time?

The whole thing really simmers down to this, that if watered and fed properly and in time less soil can be used than if the plants are left half the time to care for themselves. One thing is certain, you cannot plant 3½-inch plants in three inches of loose soil, nor is it advisable to plant such stock in four inches of loose soil; neither can you plant field-grown plants in soil of that depth unless the soil shakes off the roots pretty well, so that many will have to be guided by outside conditions. If blood and bone, sheep manure, and other good fertilizers are used, three inches of solid soil is ample. It is surprising how a plant will eat if fed properly.

I will add that if less than three inches of solid soil is on the benches during May, June, July and August, it will necessitate a lot of extra watering. The air itself, with the strong action of the sun, will abstract too much moisture and not leave enough for the plants. Then even the liquid manure will not be as beneficial as the extra inch of soil, so that, in a general way, I believe each grower has to decide his own case and plant accordingly.

It is well not to have too much soil in winter, as the quicker the bench dries out the sweeter the soil will remain. You can go to extremes either way. The watering part alone would decide my case.

AUGUST POEHLMANN.

I have never experimented with less than four inches of soil for growing carnations, but I coincide with Mr. Baur's opinion that four inches is much better than six inches. Our soil is a trifle heavy and with six inches of it in the benches it will get sour before we are aware of it, especially in the months of November, December and January.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Soil and Planting.

Nature of soil plays its part in carnation culture, though I am inclined to think some of us are apt to attach too much importance to this point. Of course we would not choose an extremely sandy soil, or a very heavy clay one, but would prefer a happy medium.

In visiting different growers throughout the country one finds soils of widely different nature, but invariably the careful grower turns out good stock, showing that it is not so much the nature of the soil as it is the nature of the man who studies and prepares it. He must make himself familiar with its whole make-up and decide what is needed to add to its fertility, at the same time improving its mechanical condition if need be.

A soil may be ever so fertile and contain every element needed in exactly the right proportions, a balanced ration, as it were, and still have a tendency to get into bad mechanical condition through handling and watering. If your soil bears strongly on clay I trust when you rolled up the pile, a good quantity of horse manure was added and some that was neither fire fanged nor rotted beyond recognition. Soil of a sandy nature needs cow manure rather than that of the horse, but in either case it is advisable to employ both to some extent.

Remember that air-slaked lime has the property of greatly improving the mechanical condition of soil, be it clayey or sandy, besides neutralizing any acidity that may occur. Soils having the tendency above referred to should be remedied before planting or trouble of the chronic kind will result.

There are those who advocate using the same soil the second year, allowing it to dry out in the benches and adding fresh fertilizers previous to replanting. While fair success has attended my several trials made along this line, I cannot endorse the method; in fact, my opinion has been that owing to our having an extra depth (ten inches) of soil in the benches tried, this circumstance was the main reason of the degree of success attained. These benches were later reduced to a depth of five inches.

The advice given to a grower by Mr. Baur and myself a year ago against using soil frozen in a house during the late coal strike, proved sound. The grower in question removed the greater part, refilling with new soil, leaving a small section of old soil for trial. The result showed such a marked difference between plants in fresh soil and those planted in the trial section that no doubt remained as to the false economy and great risk in using the same soil a second year.

Good planters, like artists and waterers, as Brother Scott says, are born and not made, but the main features are to plant firmly and no deeper than they stood in the field, rather less.

I have always held that the carnation is not unlike the strawberry in that its roots should be carefully arranged when planted and not dropped into a hole in a tangled mass. To do this properly and handily, dig a hole of good size, forming a mound in the center, on which arrange the roots to radiate in every direction. When covered in with soil and firmly pressed down, every root and its tributaries should have good contact with the soil and will cover sufficient area to draw a good food supply.

Plant in straight rows each way to facilitate putting on supports and cultivation between the rows. Do not plant too many before watering and in no case soak the soil to the point of saturation. A pint of water applied directly around the stem is sufficient for the first watering. Frequent spraying during the next few days after planting will assist in the establishment of the plants, at the same time wetting the soil more or less.

When digging plants in the field do not fail to leave a few to replace those which may die or do not give promise of doing well. These can be lifted and potted later for use as required.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Preparations for Planting.

When you house your plants you should use a good deal of foresight in deciding where you plant the different varieties so that later on you will not be wishing that you had planted some of the varieties on another bed or in another house. Of course, we cannot tell what conditions may arise a year or six months ahead, but every grower knows that he will want a certain amount of space the next spring for his young stock and he also knows which bed or bench he would prefer for it, and by planting on that space a variety which he can dispense with after January 15 he can save himself much worry. Some growers plant without any such forethought, depending on some bench or bed to prove unprofitable for space for the young stock. That works all right whenever you happen to have such a bed, but suppose all your beds are in fine shape just when you want the room for the young stock? The plants you expected to discard about that time may be planted on a bed which is not very well suited for the young plants and so you will either have to place them in an inferior position or else throw out a bed of plants which are in good shape and profitable. As I said before, it will pay you well to bear this in mind.

If your houses are modern you will have no trouble about head room, but many of the older houses have beds too close to the glass to grow many of the varieties. Plant such varieties as Lawson and Glacier where there is the least headroom and such varieties as Lorna and Harlowarden where there are at least four feet between the bed and the glass. Then, again, don't plant a short-growing variety on the same bed with a very tall variety unless you use individual wire supports, but plant all varieties that need about the same amount of supports on a bed together.

While all the above suggestions are worthy of consideration they are, of course, second in importance and must be subject to the temperatures required by the different varieties. This last is by far the most important in deciding where to plant each variety.

If you plant all your carnations early it does not make a great deal of difference which variety you plant first, but if you plant some early and some late you should pick out the heavy and slower growers to plant first. Such varieties as grow wiry and rapidly will recover quicker and will bear late planting better than Lawson and such varieties.

Another thing which should have much to do with the time you plant, is the condition of the growth. If you have had much rain and the plants are growing rapidly I would advise you to wait until they have passed through a short dry spell, which will ripen the growth somewhat and less wilting will result. A few years ago we made a practice of waiting for a rain and digging our carnations as soon as possible afterward, because it is usually cooler for a few days. In some soils this is necessary in order to get the roots up without tearing them too much. Our soil is sandy enough to crumble, whether it is moist or dry, and we have no trouble in securing all of the roots. We find that after a week or so of drouth the plants are in shape so they will wilt very little and the roots, as soon as they are set in the moist soil, freshen up and take hold at once.

Be sure and see that the soil is in a proper state of moisture when you plant. The day before you intend to plant examine the soil carefully and if it is too dry give it enough water so that when you plant it will be about as moist as it should be used for potting; moist enough so it will not shrivel the roots and yet not wet enough to be packy. If it is too wet when you plant you will find that it will quickly sour and turn green on the surface, often causing stem-rot and other diseases. The plants will not thrive as they should after the soil has been handled too wet.

Fumigating.

An inquiry has come to me regarding the best way to burn the To-bak-ine fumigating powder and as there may be others who may benefit by our experience I will answer in this way: Take a piece of heavy tin, the heavier the better, about 10x18 inches. Bend about two inches at each end so it will point upward and outward. Then take a piece of wire fly-screen the same size as the tin and lay it over the tin and bend the ends down and under so it will be hooked securely. On this screen lay a piece of paper sprinkled with kerosene, on top of which spread the fumigating powder, one-half to one pound, and light around the edges. If the tin is not stiff enough to hold the wire screen up in the middle you can punch two or three holes in the tin at each end and run pieces of heavy wire through and under the screen, or you can lay something noncombustible between the tin and the screen. The screen being raised allows a good draft, which is not possible when the powder is spread on a solid piece of tin. Burned in this way you will find this powder very effective in destroying green and black aphis and much less harmful to the plants than burning tobacco stems during this hot weather.

PLANTS AND SOIL.

Should I buy field-grown carnation plants or those from 3½-inch pots for shipment to southern Texas? What I want is the safest stock to plant here about August 10, to bloom about December 10. Would you advise leaf-mold fresh from the woods in preference to a stiff loam from the garden that has been cultivated several years and which had a liberal dressing of manure last spring?

A. W. K.

There is no reason why carnation plants from the field, if packed carefully, should not carry to your city in good condition. Any of the up-to-date carnation growers will know how to pack them for long distance shipping and there are a number of them who can lay them down in your city within four days after packing. Order as close to home as you can. Plants from 3½-inch pots would, of course, stand the journey somewhat better and if you can be sure that you will get first-class, well-branched plants it would no doubt pay you to get them. They will suffer less and will take hold better than the others, but I doubt whether you will get as good plants as you would from the field.

Don't use leaf-mold for growing carnations. A good heavy friable loam is what you want. You should have begun preparing your soil last fall, or at least in the spring, but if your garden soil is in good mechanical condition it may raise fair carnations. I would advise you to mix either some old cow manure with it, about one part manure to four of soil, or a bushel of sheep manure to a cubic yard of soil. If there has been no crop growing on it this summer the dressing of manure you gave it last spring may be sufficient.

A. F. J. Baur.

ROSES

DRYING OFF STOCK.

Roses, such as Bride and Bridesmaid, which are to be carried over for another season's work, should now receive the treatment necessary to fit them for this purpose. As the necessary elements to sustain another year's growth will be partly exhausted and the soil, by reason of last season's feeding, will have become overcharged with salts, which are detrimental to the health of the plants, a removal of as much of this soil as can be done with safety to the roots is advisable. In order to accomplish this with as little injury to the plants as possible the stock should be brought into a state of partial rest.

This can be done by gradually withholding water from the roots, giving ample ventilation both night and day and using the syringe to keep spider in check while the ripening is going on, as any injury to the foliage during this process is just as detrimental to the health of the plants as when they are in full vigor. Care must be taken not to dry them so much that the leaves will shrivel or the young wood wilt during very bright weather. In two or three weeks with this kind of treatment they will be ripe enough to be operated on.

Carefully remove all the small blind wood and cut back the strong shoots to five or six eyes. Then remove as much of the surface soil as can possibly be done without injuring the roots. The surface should then be sprinkled with air-slaked lime and the bench filled up again with a compost of about equal parts of well rotted cow manure and good fibrous sod.

The bench should then get a thorough soaking, after which for the first week a cool, close atmosphere should be maintained when possible. During the night the ventilators can be nearly fully open, thus retarding the breaking of the eyes until root action has again been established.

By tying the stronger growths in a horizontal position the buds which are at the base of the stem and in a dormant state will be encouraged to break and form nice shoots. Frequent and light syringing, while helping to keep the house cool, will also, by keeping the air moist, hasten the breaking of eyes. As the leaves develop and the young growths begin to reach, ventilation should be increased and watering be resumed.

Ribes.

LARVAE.

Enclosed I send some leaves from my rose plants. You will see the injury of some insect. Please tell me what it is and how to combat it.

C. H.

Judging from the quality of leaves enclosed, I would say you are having good success in your efforts as a grower. The pest which is creating havoc with the foliage is the larvae of one of the sawflies and, as it assumes the pupal state in a little over a week, its depredations will soon cease. As it works mostly at night it is rather difficult to find. Dusting the leaves with pyrethrum powder is a very effective remedy. One of the surest methods of destroying this pest quickly is to mix finely sifted bran with Paris green, in the proportion of one part of Paris green to sixty of bran, and apply with the powder blower.

RIBES.

THE BETTER PLAN.

Will you please tell me the proper time and conditions required to give Bride and Bridesmaid roses a rest for a second season? These roses were struck by hail in March and given a cutting back and mulched. They are now giving a good crop of flowers, with clear foliage and long stems. How shall I treat them for a good crop for this winter?

F. W. R.

Seeing that these roses got a check in March and were cut back, they do not now require much of a rest; in fact, the best treatment, as they are doing so well, would be to keep them going and feed judiciously. RIBES.

TOBACCO LEAVES.

We have a chance to get a couple of loads of very fine Wisconsin tobacco leaves which were cut last year and, being in a warehouse all winter in a damp place, became somewhat mouldy and cannot be used. We would like to know whether it would be of any value to save this for fertilizer, or if they could be used to any other advantage for greenhouse purposes. C. E. S.

These tobacco leaves are quite suitable for ordinary fumigating purposes and if steeped in water for twenty-four hours the decoction is one of the best insecticides. As a fertilizer they would not be any better than plenty of ordinary farm yard manures and would be more uncertain in their effects. They can be put to good use in the form of ashes. Vegetable ashes contain most of the elements necessary to plant life but in a very concentrated form and should be used with caution. RIBES.

NEW ROSES.

The gold medal of the National Rose Society of England was awarded in two instances at the show at London, July 6, to new varieties that have not been previously exhibited. One of these was named Dean Hole, and was shown by Alex Dickson & Sons. It is presumably a hybrid tea, and somewhat resembles in color and form the variety Mrs. Mawley, but the color is rather richer and the form a little better.

The other variety awarded a gold medal was named Mrs. O. G. Orpen, and was shown by Mr. O. G. Orpen. It is a climbing damask rose, with single flowers of a rich shade of pink color, four to five inches in diameter. It is a strong grower, and has large, vigorous-looking foliage. The variety would be especially suitable for cultivation against a pillar.

Cards of commendation were awarded to the two varieties following: Irish Harmony, shown by Messrs. A. Dickson & Sons, a single rose of pale cream color, some six inches or more in diameter, the orange-colored anthers having a good effect. It is said to form a magnificent bush. The foliage is bright and very smooth. Lady Betty, also exhibited by Dickson & Sons, is of the hybrid tea class; the petals are reddish-rose on the exterior, and bronze or buff-colored inside.

New roses since 1901, issued by nurserymen of the British Isles, were represented by some exquisite specimens, showing the great advance made in such a short period. Mildred Grant was again in the foremost position. The box containing the prize group, shown by B. Cant & Sons, Colchester, contained Mamie, Mildred Grant, Robert Scott, Frau Karl Druschki, Helene Guillot, Jean Batuatois, Apotheker G. Hofer, Alice Lindsell, Florence Pemberton, Lady Moyra Beauclerk, Ben Cant and Edith D'Ombrain.

VIOLETS.

Which is considered the more profitable violet to grow, Marie Louise or Princess of Wales? How many flowers per plant for the season will good stock of each of the above average? W. B. S.

In answering this question I would not like to name either the one or the other as the more profitable for this reason, that circumstances alter cases and every grower must find out for himself. This can be done pretty fairly with a year's trial, providing one is systematic and keeps an accurate record of blooms cut each day the whole season through, keeping each kind separately. Then you can tell which pays best per week, per month and for the whole season, providing also that you keep a record of the price received for each in the same way. Then, too, there is the taste of the market to be considered. Where you are, perhaps, the kind that gives you the greater quantity of flowers is not the popular one with your trade. This being the case you have to grow what is wanted. With us the Marie Louise is the more profitable but, as I say, it may not be in your locality. Therefore, if I did not know for which there is the greater demand and which does the better in your soil I would plant equally of both kinds, keeping an accurate account and the end of the season will tell you definitely and without guesswork the kind that you want to grow the following season.

In answer to the second question, here again there is no telling, as so much depends on the care given them, exposure of house and the thousand and one details that go to make a good crop. Fifty flowers per plant is considered a good average for any kind, but this can be made more or less, as I have said, by the care taken and the size of the plants.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

Important to Exhibitors.

Intending exhibitors at the St. Louis convention are requested to read carefully the revised rules adopted by the executive board last March, whereby all exhibitors are required to make special entry with the superintendent of such novelties in plants, flowers, supplies or other material, new devices and improvements in apparatus, as they desire to have passed upon by the judges.

The judges will not report upon or make awards to any exhibits where the owner has neglected to make proper entry.

JOSEPH TAILBY.

Among the New England florists, few names are better known or more respected than that of Joseph Tailby, of Wellesley. Mr. Tailby is an Englishman by birth, having first seen the light near Market Harbor, Leicestershire. His first start was made at the Hamberstone Nurseries near Leicester, owned by George Walker. From there he went as foreman to Captain Boulther, Springfield House, Knowle, Warwickshire, later going as head gardener to Geo. W. Dowler, also of Knowle. His next position was with the still celebrated house of James Carter & Co., London, with whom he stayed until he essayed to try his luck in the New World.

Landing in New York in 1865, Mr. Tailby drifted to the establishment of the late C. J. Powers, of South Framingham, Mass. Dahlias at this time, of the show and fancy varieties, were becoming popular in America. Dry roots imported at 3 and 6 cents each from England were propagated for all they were worth, and small plants were readily disposed of at $9 per dozen. While at South Framingham, Mr. Tailby received some tempting offers to go to positions in New York and farther south, but liked Massachusetts too well to leave it.

In 1868 he started in business on his own account at Wellesley, not far from his present location. He started with eighteen hotbed sashes. In those days verbenas retailed at $1.50 per dozen and tomatoes at $1. Potatoes, too, were on the boom at this time. Some of Breesee's varieties were secured and cuttings of the newest and best sorts rooted in pots sold at $18 per dozen.

The next year Mr. Tailby built three houses, each 10x50, heated by flues, quite an impressive plant in those days. He was probably the first to force H. P. roses, having no less than fifty varieties. Marechal Niel, Bon Silene, Niphetos, Safrano and other old favorites were also handled.

Mr. Tailby was, we believe, the first hybridizer of carnations in America. The best variety which ever came from his hands, and will forever be associated with his name, was Grace Wilder, the result of crossing Boule de Niege and La Purite. This variety received the first certificates ever issued for an American-raised carnation, both in New York and Boston, in 1880, also a prize of $30 from the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. Few carnations have attained Grace Wilder's popularity. Other varieties raised included Fred Johnson, scarlet; Henry Priest and Henrietta Sargent. None of these, however, gained the favor of his first seedling.

While always a strong carnationist, Mr. Tailby did not neglect other lines. He introduced Tailby's Hybrid cucumber, a result of crossing All the Year Round and White Spine, selling his stock of seed at $80 per pound. He introduced Little Gem calla in America, selling $3,000 worth of that variety and securing a silver medal for it in Boston. A sport from Gloire de Lorraine begonia, named Glory of Wellesley, also received a silver medal. Good authorities still consider it the best sport of that popular begonia sent out. Many other plants of European origin were popularized by Mr. Tailby.

He is still as busy as ever in the field of hybridization, his new calla, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, not yet in commerce, being one of his best hybrids. He also has numerous other seedlings which are bound to become popular, particularly as bedding plants. Though far from a young man, Mr. Tailby is still hale and hearty and a veritable encyclopedia of horticultural lore. His greenhouse plant, close to the picturesque Wellesley station, on the Boston and Albany Railroad, is well known to florists. For some years one of his two sons, W. W. Tailby, has been associated with him in his thriving business, and being a "chip of the old block," the firm of Tailby & Son is bound to be heard from in the future, as it has been in the past. Long may father and son be associated together!

PRICE OF GLASS.

Leading window glass jobbers west of the Alleghany mountains held a meeting at Chicago July 26 and decided on a 15 per cent advance on the price of window glass. The decision probably will affect the entire western glass market. The advance was decided upon unanimously. It was said that glass had been selling for less than the cost of production. After the price agreement had been made, the discount rate of ninety and fifteen per cent was made the rule for future orders.

NUMBER OF FLOWERS.

We have Geo. S. Kalb in a solid bed without glass at present. The plants are fifteen to eighteen inches high, three to five shoots to a plant, and more shoots coming around the base of the plants. What treatment should be given them to get four to six flowers to a plant?

INQUIRER.

The only thing necessary to do is to thin out the shoots on each plant to the desired number, allowing for each shoot to carry one flower. If the shoots around the base are merely suckers coming through the soil, I think the better plan to follow is to remove all these from the plants and allow them to carry three to five shoots only, which is enough for any plant if half way decent flowers are looked for. A multitude of flowers is always at the expense of quality.

When the correspondent makes up his mind just how many shoots to keep it will be good policy to run over the plants once a week at least to keep all superfluous growth removed.

BRIAN BORU.

The Market.

The week opens with business stagnation, humid weather and light and inferior stock generally in the cut flower market. There seems to be little prospect of encouraging improvement until after the convention. Gladioli are now arriving in floods and prices have receded to $1 per 100 for the best, while the old summer figures of 50 cents will doubtless be reached before the week is over. Smilax is a drug and Sprengeri does not seem to be wanted at any price.

Roses, carnations and lilies are not in excess of the demand, but low prices still prevail, except for special Maids and Beauties. Lilies are not so abundant and values have improved. Asters are here in all sizes, colors and qualities, and the shipments increase daily. No street outlet for the surplus is yet in view. The sidewalk merchants will dispense fruit and hot corn at Coney until the dog days are over.

Convention Trip.

The St. Louis convention is a topic of general interest. Regrets at the decision of Philadelphia to "go it alone" are heard, the delightful companionship of John Westcott and his cohorts and his liberal dispensations on the way to Asheville not yet having passed from our memory. A goodly crowd will come from New York, traveling on the Baltimore & Ohio. We count on half a hundred.

Death of C. H. Joosten.

It was the intention of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Joosten to enjoy the convention and the Fair. The sudden death of Mr. Joosten last Thursday is sincerely regretted by a large circle of friends and business associates, by whom he was highly beloved and respected. He had only recently returned from a happy visit at the nurserymen's convention in Atlanta and gave no evidence of serious illness until shortly before he passed away, on Thursday, July 21. All arrangements had been made with his European houses for the usual large fall importations.

Mr. Joosten was born in 1838, at Amsterdam, Holland, and came to this country in 1856. He served during the civil war in a Wisconsin regiment and at its close engaged in the hardware business in Minnesota. He has been engaged in the importation of bulbs and horticultural goods in New York since 1873 and the business will continue under the same title as in the past.

The funeral services were held on Saturday evening and the burial at Greenwood on Sunday. The sympathy of his friends in the trade is extended Mrs. Joosten in her bereavement.

Various Notes.

Arthur I. Boddington is comfortably installed in his new and commodious quarters on West Fourteenth street, and is dispensing rapidly his latest orchid importation.

Mr. Ward, of the Cottage Gardens, contemplates a visit to Europe about the first of August. L. C. Bobbink is already there, and August Rhotert. Ralph M. Ward has just returned, via the Etruria, after a most successful business and pleasure journey, and with abundant importations arranged for that will keep his three representatives busy on the road for many moons.

Wm. Donohue, manager of Thos. Young, Jr.'s, One Hundred and twenty-eighth street store, has combined his vacation and honeymoon, and will return from his month's outing at Tannersville, in the Catskills, next week. He was married at St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York, on July 10 to Miss Anna Gertrude Cronin.

Geo. W. Crawbuck, the wholesaler of Brooklyn, is spending a few weeks with his family at East Gnogne, L. I.

Geo. Saltford, the violet expert, will enjoy a few weeks with his family on the shores of Lake Ontario, spending a week or more on his return among his growers at Rhinebeck and vicinity. His son, Clarence, is now in charge at Twenty-ninth street, having recovered from his severe injury at the club outing in June.

John Hydebrough, of J. K. Allen's force, is enjoying his vacation at Rockaway.

John B. Waldis, of Roanoke, Va., florist and nurseryman, is taking in the sights of a great city and visiting Arthur Wiese, of Ghormley's.

Arthur Hunt, of Langjahr's, is taking in several Long Island resorts during his vacation. His employer and Mrs. Langjahr contemplate enjoying the convention and exposition at St. Louis. Mr. Langjahr is handling a splendid assortment of water lilies.

Albert Bock and John F. Sharkey, of Thos. Young's retail department, and Wm. Sampson, of the wholesale, contemplate spending their vacation in the mountains. Albert Roetke, the artistic designer of the Fifth avenue store, will also leave for a month's outing on Monday at Block Island.

Julius Lang makes weekly trips to Atlantic Highlands, where his family is located for the summer.

Jos. Fenrich will visit his mother at her home, Lanesville, in the Catskills, next week and will combine business and pleasure by calling on his growers while away. He is quite enthusiastic as to his prospects and well pleased with his business to date.

A. Miller, of Brooklyn, reports his best season in bedding stock, but much injury to his nursery department at the Jamaica establishment last winter. He has over 6,000 plants of his specialty, the Camæliaflora dahlia, and has a new white of much merit which he imported last season.

John B. Nugent, Sr., aged 83 years, and John B. Nugent, Jr., weight 222 pounds, of Young & Nugent, enjoyed a fishing trip together last week and "brought home a wagonload of black bass and bluefish," to quote from the younger of the fishermen, who is now on a fish diet in preparation for his arduous duties as a member of the rose grading committee at the St. Louis convention.

Tommy Miller, of Walter Sheridan's, and John Reynolds, are away for their annual rest, and Samuel Kilpatrick, the bookkeeper, goes August 9 to the everlasting hills of Rip Van Winkle. Mr. Sheridan is enjoying his restful hours at adjacent resorts and among his growers.

John Young adopts about the same system of recreation and, unfortunately, neither of these gentlemen will attend the St. Louis convention.

Miss Kathryn Dowd, bookkeeper for Charles Millang, will leave early in August for a long and well-earned holiday at Lake Hopatcong. Miss Hattie Wollreich, bookkeeper for Alex. Guttman, will leave next Monday for a two weeks' stay at the same delightful resort.

Miss Lizzie Hull, bookkeeper for J. J. Perkins, leaves the city on Saturday for her two weeks' outing at Rockaway.

Michael C. Ford, of Ford Bros., is at Greenwood Lake, and closes his second week of fresh air on Saturday. L. Allen and Frank Haywood, of this house, have been enjoying their annual vacation in the Catskills.

Arthur Schloss, of Schloss Bros., the ribbon men, is visiting in the mountains, and Emil Schloss will join his family there next week and remain until time to start for the convention. Schloss Bros.' ribbon exhibit at St. Louis will occupy double the space used at Milwaukee.

P. Smith, of John I. Raynor's, is summering with his family at Elizabeth, N. J.

Geo. L. Olney, bookkeeper at Raynor's, has just returned from a week's camera outing in Jersey. Mr. Olney uses his pictures for stereopticon lectures and has made a success of this practical "side" enterprise, especially in his temperance speeches, which he makes very effective in this unique way.

J. K. Allen has left Paris for the "ould sod" and will start for home August 24 on the Baltic, the largest vessel in the world.

Theo. Lang, the captain of the New York Bowling Club, has added another bowler to his family. The boy is a credit to his father and will commence practice early.

J. Austin Shaw.

PHILADELPHIA.

It takes about an hour for the wholesaler to rush through the business in the mornings. This is followed by a day of comparative quiet, when the books may be scrutinized, plans made for the coming season and growers visited. Of course, there are occasional flurries announced by a hasty footstep or a tinkling bell to disturb the summery quiet.

Really good flowers are decidedly scarce. S. S. Pennock filled an order for 100 cattleyas a few days ago. Roses are in fair supply. Besides Beauties and Kaiserins there are some very fair Brides and Maids for midsummer. E. Bernheimer is getting some nice flowers with good foliage. Carnations are rather scarce. Besides the varieties named lately, Edw. Reid is getting some nice Crockers. The outdoor blooms will be welcome.

Asters are by no means plentiful; a shortage in the crop is expected. Gladioli are plentiful. Valley is in demand at times and scarce. Leo Niessen has some pink lilies. A few Harrisii can be seen.

A New Geranium.

It is a well-known fact that the up-to-date newspaper man has to get much of his information from those on the inside on the wing, so to speak. So it was in this case, when the Review's man caught John Ruppert, of the H. A. Dreer Co., while he was hurrying from the Flower Market to catch a train for New York. While walking down the street Mr. Ruppert spoke of the good demand in Gotham for small palms and ferns and then with a joyous smile he told of the hit that will soon be made by the new geranium, Telegraph. It is described as a vastly improved General Grant, is of robust habit, very free flowering, flowers large, single and of color resembling Grant. This new variety is introduced by Thomas Devoy & Son, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and will be sent out by three firms. It is a cross between Mrs. E. G. Hill and Wonder and is expected to surpass the standard varieties.

Various Notes.

Joseph Beavis & Son are cutting nice Kaiserins from their new house, 14x150 feet, built last April.

H. Bayersdorfer and wife were passengers on the Kroonland, sailing from Antwerp for New York last Saturday.

Walter P. Stokes spends his Sundays at Mt. Pocono, where his family are spending the summer.

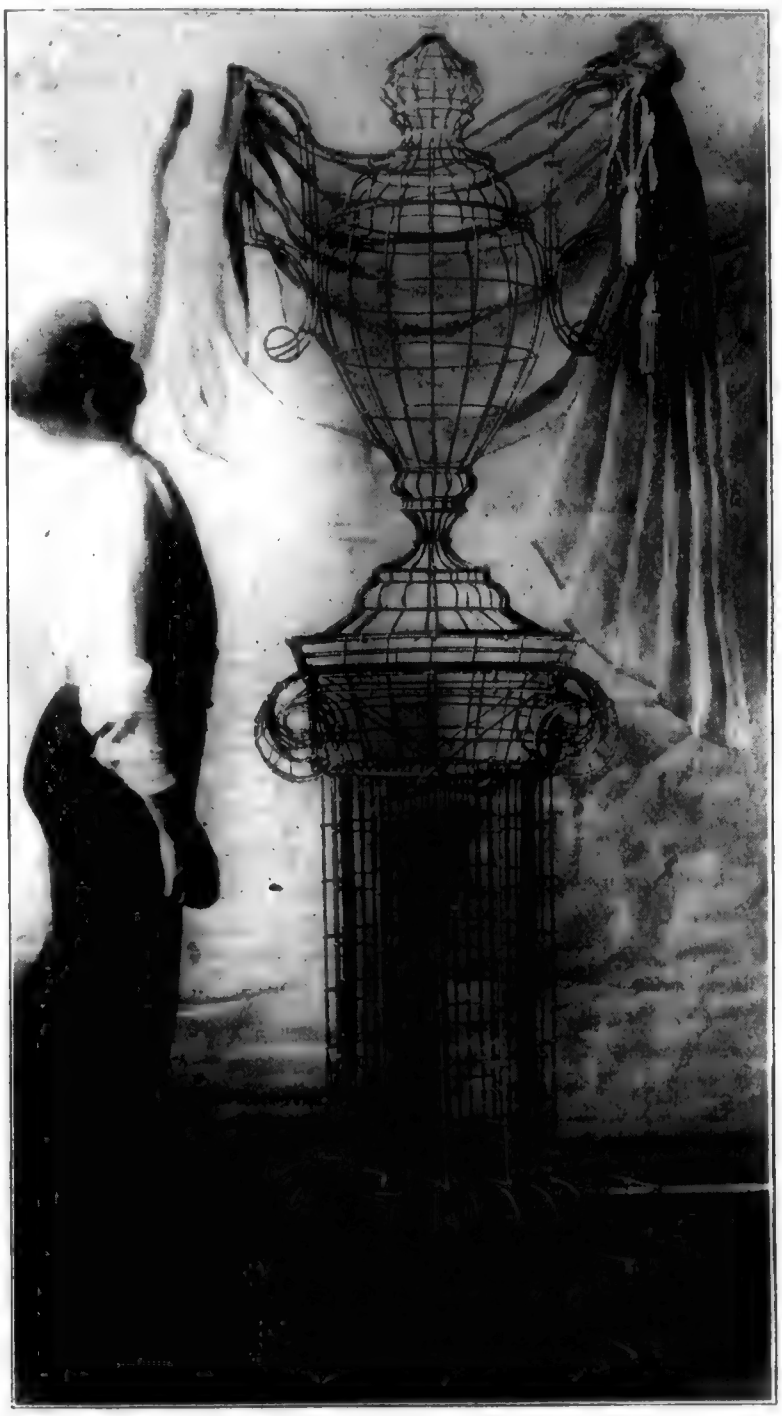
M. Rice & Co. are working full time to keep pace with the demand for supplies from the florists.

Edward Reid is busily engaged in improving his place to facilitate the handling of an increased stock promised for next season. Mr. Reid does not know whether he will go to St. Louis, but laughingly said he would probably jump on the last car.

Charles F. Edgar is off on his vacation.

H. Whelen, of Newtown, is sending some good Brides and Maids to the Flower Market by Frank Lovell.

Eugene Bernheimer is spending the summer at Fort Washington, from which point he is making visits to the growers in the afternoons.



Paul Berkowitz has some new and pretty wares tastefully displayed at his firm's store, H. Bayersdorfer & Co.

Thomas B. Meehan has invited a party of friends to see Thomas Meehan & Sons' nurseries at Dresnertown the first Saturday in August. A game of cricket between the gardeners and florists of Philadelphia and Montgomery counties is on the program.

The Latest News.

The Hon. Samuel W. Pennypacker, governor of Pennsylvania, has been pleased to grant the application of Leo Niessen, W. E. McKissick and Arthur Niessen for a charter to carry on the wholesale florists' business as the Leo Niessen Co. The charter, duly signed and sealed, reached this city last Tuesday.

A fairly well attended meeting of the creditors of Robert Craig & Son listened

A LARGE DESIGN.

Every once in a while a florist gets an order for a funeral piece, which, from the amount of money to be represented, taxes his ingenuity. The head of a department in some big concern passes away, and each one of the employes under him contributes 50 cents or a dollar to buy a funeral piece. An order for $100 or $200 or more is not to be sneezed at; neither is it to be treated lightly if it calls for the use of the entire sum all in one piece. The larger the design the more limited in choice is the maker. If fancy stock is used a fine result can be obtained and a large value represented, but in the majority of cases this is not satisfactory; size is what is wanted. A great cross, a massive column or a huge urn meets with the approval of the customer.

Along this line is the large new design represented in the accompanying reproduction from a photograph. This was made by Reed & Keller, New York, and stands seven feet high. It is in the form of a draped Grecian mortuary urn on an Ionic pedestal, the drapery being made of wire netting so that it can be filled with flowers. Some of the leading New York retailers who have seen this frame have expressed the opinion that when filled with flowers it could be made the handsomest piece ever made up. Reed & Keller will show this huge design in their exhibit at St. Louis.

BUFFALO.

Except for the inevitable, there is little business, but as much as can reasonably be expected. We find our wholesale house loaded up with flowers and Wm. Kasting is not so busy with flowers as he is distributing Croweanum.

Those who can get away for a few weeks are taking advantage of this slack time. Jos. H. Rebstock has been handling the ribbons on a coaching party through the highways of beautiful western New York, and a jolly automobile party from Detroit passed through the city recently. Conspicuous as occupants of the car were President Phil Breitmeyer, Mr. Dilger and a few others. The leonine face and figure of Arnold Ringier has pervaded our quiet city. We can imagine that the Baron Bonstettin was built along his lines. T. A. Webb has had his two weeks' vacation at his home in Corfu. He tells me the Dale Estate, where he has charge of a block of carnation houses, had 35,000 plants on the beds very early in June or end of May and looking fine. Harry Balsley has been doing his usual midsummer stunt in our town.

We very much regret that we missed by a few hours C. H. Totty, of Madison, N. J. We have such a high opinion of Mr. Totty as an all around and bright young florist that an hour's exchange of views would be as instructive as it would be enjoyable. We also missed J. J. Curran, superintendent of the newly started place at Elmira, N. Y., the United States Cut Flower Company. When asked how much glass is already up, Mr. Curran says they "had only time to put up 100,000 feet this season." This is only a small beginning. If the remainder of the million projected feet are to be built out of the profits of the existing glass, it may be some years before completed, but if unlimited capital is behind it we may soon see, in the valley of the Chemung, a place rivaling that of Alderman Reinberg. Don't be frightened, little man; you will be making more money in proportion to your investment than these mammoth places, and we ought to be proud of these men who have the pluck and enterprise to put their capital into the business. It elevates it, advertises it and puts it on a broader base, and it is doubtful if the erection of glass houses is much, if anything, ahead of the ever growing demand for their product.

Buffalo has 3,000 autos, more than any city of its size on the planet. These speedy vehicles will at least show to hundreds of our urban population the beauties of our rural scenery which you never see from a railroad car, besides the fact that the railroad runs through the poorest and most unpicturesque part of the country, at least in the east and middle west. On each side of the train the fields and background of woods are made hideous by the mammoth, gaudy signs which the poor farmer allows on his lawn for a few dollars.

Coming in on the New York Central the other day, I counted the following in less than half a mile and many of them several times repeated: Heinze's Pickles, Carter's Little Liver Pills, Cascarets, Children cry for Castoria, Mennen's Powder, Hood's Sarsaparilla, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, Cremo Cigars, Sapolio, but I am really ashamed to go on. There were at least a dozen more. In fact, it was only occasionally that you got, between these boards, a glimpse of the golden grain, the tropical growth of the corn, the deep green, heavy oats, or the refreshing woods of maple and beech. Here's work for the Society for Beautifying Our Country. A farmer allows his barns to be smeared over with the ads of some poisonous concoction containing forty per cent alcohol, and his wife preaches temperance at the village meeting of W. C. T. U.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Market conditions show no material change. Roses, if of good quality, bring fair prices. Kaiserins are scarce and bring $6 to $8 for the best. Beauties sell up to $15. Brides and Bridesmaids in some cases bring $4, but many go for a quarter that figure. Carnations are shortening up, but the supply seems equal to the demand. Prices vary from 25 cents to $1 per 100, few bringing the higher prices. Blooms are getting very small, owing to the late hot wave. A few outdoor blooms are appearing, including that old familiar variety, Mrs. Fisher.

Sweet peas have continued to sell fairly well but stems are getting short, owing to drouth. There has been a scarcity of good lavender and white varieties, prices ranging from 10 to 20 cents per 100. A good supply of outdoor asters are now appearing and sell from 25 cents to $1 per 100. Outdoor gladioli are becoming plentiful and are of fine quality, and average in price $4 per 100. Candytuft, coreopsis, tuberoses, gypsophila and nymphæas are the principal other flowers noted.

Weekly Exhibition.

Owing to rainy weather the show at Horticultural Hall on July 23 was less extensive than usual. Two very fine tanks of aquatics were shown by Robert Cameron, from Harvard Botanic Gardens, his nymphæas being extra good. Wm. Thatcher, gardener to Mrs. J. L. Gardner, also filled a tank. Achimenes were on the schedule, but only brought out one entry, from Wm. Thatcher, which received second prize. Wm. Whitman, M. Sullivan, gardener, showed thirty named varieties of phlox, comprising the best sorts. Mrs. E. M. Gill contributed a general display. J. W. Manning had specimens of the cut-leaved sumach. Edward Kirk, Bar Harbor, Me., showed a vase of bright scarlet carnations perfectly hardy. The flowers had a delightful odor. They received honorable mention. If we can secure a hardy race of these corresponding to the English border class they will prove great acquisitions.

W. A. Manda showed plants of Cattleya Harrisonæ and Lælia elegans. Two forms of the latter, Mrs. Geo. Schlegel and No. 200, received honorable mention. Miss Isabella Shattuck received first for collection of native ferns, showing forty-four varieties, Mrs. Arthur Clark and C. C. Kingman following. The Boston Mycological Club had a display of fungi. As usual there were good displays of seasonable fruits and vegetables.

Various Notes.

Colonel J. H. Woodford, whose critical illness was recorded in the last issue of the Review, died on July 16 at Wenham, and was interred at Newton on July 19. For many years Mr. Woodford's figure was a familiar one at Horticultural Hall. He retired from active service at the end of last year. His death is mourned by a large circle of friends.

Arthur Kidder, of Kidder Bros., is enjoying his vacation. Duncan Robinson is acting as salesman in his stead in the market.

H. W. Field and G. H. Sinclair, leading florists of Northampton, Mass., were recent callers at the market, after visiting the leading florist establishments in the vicinity of Boston. A. N. Pierson, of Cromwell, Conn., also gave us a call last week.

There is a great scarcity of Kaiserin roses in our market this season. We hope some one will take note and fill the deficiency next year.

Geo. E. Buxton, the carnation king of the granite state, is remodeling his heating plant at Nashua, N. H., taking out three small boilers and replacing by one powerful one.

A fine specimen of Miltonia vexillaria carrying twenty-five spikes was noted in Doyle's window the past week. It was grown by Peter Cairns, of Waltham.

Extensive repairs are being made to the greenhouses at Harvard Botanic Gardens. Mr. Cameron has a fine show of aquatics there at present.

Thomas Roland, of Nahant, the Lorraine wizard, reports a first-class demand for that popular begonia, all plants he can raise being shipped as soon as ready.

A generous rainfall on July 23 was very welcome to florists here. All crops were suffering severely from drouth.

The stores present a holiday aspect at present. Window decorations consist largely of gladioli, tuberoses, coreopsis, sweet peas, asters and water lilies. Roses and carnations are now kept in the background.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society on July 23, appropriations were voted for library improvements. A contribution of $20 was made to the Vilmorin memorial fund. It was voted to hold a demonstration in the park system, during the early winter, of methods of treatment for the San Jose scale and brown-tail moth. Ten new members were elected.

The committee of arrangements of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society met on July 23 and talked over prospective prizes for the coming meetings of the rose and chrysanthemum societies. A list of special prizes for the chrysanthemum show, as well as the society's regular prizes, will be printed very shortly. A new class calling for fifty blooms, one or more varieties, to be arranged in the society's large china vases, with prizes of $60, $50, $40, $30 and $20, was approved of.

There will be a number of additions to the society's schedule for the spring show of 1905, when the rose society meets in Boston. One class calling for group of Rambler and other roses for landscape or decorative effect, with prizes of $50, $35 and $25, will bring an excellent show.

The brown-tail moth continues to spread surprisingly. Moth rash remedies are now largely advertised in our daily papers. Large numbers of people are suffering from poisoning, caused by the fine hairs touching the skin.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business has been quite good the past week; stock moved out in fine style and at good paying prices. Notwithstanding the hot weather, the Elks' reunion brought many a dollar into our florists' pockets and helped to hold up prices, as the demand was almost entirely due to their being in this city.

Beauties were first on the list in demand and brought fine prices. Asters, too, were in fair supply and sold out quickly. Some extra fine gladioli were in demand for window display. Sweet peas moved fairly well but at a price so low as scarcely to pay for picking. Brides and Maids are few and far between and those that do come in are very poor. Some good Golden Gates and Kaiserin are to be had in limited quantities. Carnations are very poor, few of them being fit to use. There is a large supply of all kinds of green goods and a fair demand.

Various Notes.

The Elks' reunion brought forth a good sprinkling of florists who all report having had a rousing good time. Among those in the city were: W. C. Cook, Kalamazoo, Mich.; W. C. Hune, Memphis, Tenn.; L. Ullrich, Tiffin, O.; P. J. Hauswirth and wife, Chicago, Ill.; J. T. Herdigen, Aurora, Ind.; Walter Butler, Chillicothe, O.; Jas. Hartshorne, Joliet, Ill.; Theo. Bock, Hamilton, O.; Ed Helfrich, Washington Courthouse, O.; Chas. Dudley, Parkersburg, W. Va.; C. P. Dieterich, Maysville, Ky.; Chas. Weltz, Wilmington, O.

The annual outing of the Florists' Society was held July 21 and a better day could not have been had. There was a fine cool breeze and the heat was not nearly so oppressing as it had been for the last week. Some 300 or more florists and their friends made the trip up the river and all report having had a fine time. The ball game was quite exciting while it lasted but the great and sensational playing of the florists who took part is not visible in the score. The teams were called the Carnations, of whom Frank Deller was captain, and the Roses, of whom Chas. McCrea was captain. The Carnations took the lead early and won out, 18 to 6, five innings being played. The bowling games were well contested. There were four teams in the field, captained by F. Deller, Wm. Schumann, Ben George and Wm. Rodgers. Wm. Rodgers' team was made up of Tom Jackson, Jas. Allan, Dick Deller and W. Linnerman, and won the prize by a margin of fifteen pins. Miss Kate Pfeiffer won the ladies' prize for bowling.

While in this city attending the Elks' reunion Phil Hauswirth journeyed to Newport, Ky., to have a look into the mysteries of beer making at the celebrated Weiderman breweries. He wore a hat with Chicago printed in large letters on the band. Finally he boarded a car for this city and after paying his fare he said to the conductor, "Say, mister, will this car take me home?" Phil admitted that the joke was on him and it will be a long time before he will hear the last of it.

John F. Turner, care taker of Washington park, had a very narrow escape from death by being blown up by an infernal machine found directly in the course of the lawn mower he was operating.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Receipts have been at the lowest ebb during the past week. There are almost no good roses and very few good carnations and the wholesalers are having much difficulty in giving satisfaction to their out-of-town customers, who seem to forget that stock in this market shows the same mid-summer conditions as are manifest elsewhere. The result of the scarcity and a fairly heavy shipping demand is that the prices on roses are stiff for the season. Carnations which may be classed as usable are also bringing the growers very good returns. Asters are coming in more heavily, however, and prices on both items will soon be on the downward way. Roses from young stock are coming in and it will not be long until supplies are again equal to all requirements. The outdoor stock is very little in evidence just now. There are plenty of greens of all kinds.

Various Notes.

Leonard Kill, Mrs. Kill and Mrs. Peter Reinberg have returned from a visit at Denver and Colorado Springs. Mr. Kill speaks very highly of the Park Floral Co.'s place at Denver and of Wm. Clark's establishment at Colorado Springs. Mr. Clark devoted much of his time to showing the party the sights of the neighborhood. One of the places visited was the home of Mrs. P. Jewett, on North Cascade Avenue, in Colorado Springs, where there is one of the finest collections of H. P. roses to be found anywhere in the west. The rose garden contains about 1,500 plants in fifteen or twenty varieties, in the highest state of cultivation. Mrs. Jewett cuts about 500 blooms a day and distributes them to the hospitals, her friends and the sick, doing great good. Mr. Kill thought Baroness Rothschild was the best variety in the garden.

There was a special meeting of the Florists' Club last Wednesday night at which the new by-laws were adopted and convention matters discussed. There will be a special meeting of the club at Handel Hall tonight at which committees will report.

It is decided that the Chicago Florists' Club will go to the convention via the Wabash, leaving on Monday, August 15, at an hour not yet determined. If there are 100 in the party a special train will be run. It is probable that the round trip rate will be $8, which will call for first-class equipment.

During the quiet period the wholesalers are having their places fixed up. It is not safe to lean on any wood work at present, and the few buyers who appear are not surprised at the splashes of whitewash they find a little later on their clothing. Everything is being made spick and span for another busy season.

Chas. Duerr is now at Colorado Springs.

Geo. Perdikas, who has had a store at 286 Wabash avenue for a year, has opened another at 325 Wabash, using the fixtures from the Anderson Floral Co. He also deals in fruit and soda water at the new address.

B. Prazil, who has worked around Chicago for a number of years, is now gardener for Mr. Dameron, at Clarksville, Mo.

W. E. Lynch, of Hunt's, and Tom Bohanan, of Bohanan & Conger, with their families, are at Sodus, Mich., for an outing.

C. M. Dickinson has been on the sick list this week.

Hail did considerable damage west of the city July 22. At Oak Park A. H. Schneider, Geo. Baldwin, F. Blondeel and others lost some glass.

E. E. Pieser has been laid up with lumbago for a couple of days this week. He expects to get away in a few days for his vacation in Canada.

A. L. Randall Co. is handling cut fronds of Adiantum Croweanum. They are about twice as big as ordinary cuneatum and bring $1.50 per 100.

D. C. Noble, of Columbia City, and Mr. Treanor, of Treanor & Rettic, South Bend, were recent visitors.

ELGIN, ILL.—George Souster and his family have been camping near Maplevilla, near here.

FORT DODGE, IA.—P. L. Larson is building three new greenhouses and a new office and extending two old houses. Benching carnations is in progress this week.

CONSHOHOCKEN, PA.—On July 20 Miss S. Amanda Slingluff was married to William C. Harry, son of W. S. Harry, the florist, and himself employed by a Philadelphia florist.

DOVER, N. H.—C. L. Howe reports the past season the best he ever experienced. He is adding three new greenhouses this summer, which, when completed, will give him about 50,000 feet of glass. He is also building a double tenement house for the help. His carnation plants in the field are making a fine growth.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

THERE is considerable inquiry for Berberis Thunbergii in quantity for new work planned for fall.

THE orders already booked assure a big business in peonies in September, both wholesale and retail.

THE Amesbury Park Association has been organized for the purpose of securing a public park for the city of Amesbury, Mass.

IT IS said that a Mrs. C. W. Jacocks, near Orlando, Fla., has an improved pecan in such good local demand that she has received $3 a pound for the nuts, besides doing a nice business in nursery trees.

C. H. JOOSTEN was well known to most of the nurserymen of the United States and his demise so soon after many had met him in the best of health at the Atlanta convention is a shock. His career is briefly sketched in the New York notes in this issue.

THE lilac is more than holding its own; in fact, it is in greater demand each year. From the great number of hybrid varieties Wm. A. Peterson selects the following as best of their colors: Marie Legraye, white; Charles X, light purple; Rubra de Marley, rosy purple; Souvenir de Ludwig Spaeth, dark purple.

C. W. WARD says that, while conifers and evergreens may be planted in the latter part of August and during the month of September, even up to the middle of October, and a large proportion live and do well, his experience has demonstrated that early spring is the best time for planting the general run of evergreens.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The Market.

The Newport season can be said to be just getting into full swing, and the past week has seen a much better business among the florists. There have been quite a number of luncheons and dinners given the past few days, and as August approaches these will increase greatly. August is the great month here among the summer colony, for it is then that the entertaining is at its height among the "400." Sweet peas are more popular this year than ever, especially lavender and pink shades; but the market has been flooded with them, and until the past few days they have been almost without value. Some of the best growers hold their peas for 25 cents per hundred, and sell at this figure or not at all. It is a good plan, as certainly good flowers well bunched are worth that. The best American Beauty roses sell on Bellevue avenue for $5 to $6 per dozen; Liberties and Kaiserins for $3 to $4 a dozen; gardenias 50 cents each, and valley $2.50 to $3.50 per bunch of twenty-five. Outdoor hardy stuff goes very well, and is sold as circumstances direct at good prices. Trade on the whole is very good indeed.

Horticultural Society.

The Newport Horticultural Society held its last July meeting Wednesday evening with Vice-President Alexander McLellan presiding. There was considerable business to be done making arrangements for the annual exhibition September 19, 20 and 21. It was decided to have music the last day of the show, and dancing in the evening after the exhibition is over at nine o'clock. There has never been a year when more interest has been shown, and everything now points to the largest and best show the society has ever held. Winfield Scott Sisson and D. J. Coughlan were elected members of the society.

Various Notes.

Never have cactus dahlias been as popular here as now. They will have a great run this summer. Already the society people are having decorations of dahlias exclusively for dinners and luncheons. The dahlias are favorites because they bloom when other outdoor flowers are scarce and most needed for the great number of dinners and other August functions. Special colors that are favorites are being grown in large blocks on all the big places. Especially do the gardeners like Katharine Duer, the elegant scarlet; and, by the way, this dahlia originated here in Newport, and I will tell you more about it some day. Mrs. Charles Turner, for a yellow is planted very largely and also many other solid colors of the cactus type.

The highway department tree trimmers are at work on the big elm in front of the city hall and there is a great amount of comment heard because the tree, which is one of the landmarks of Broadway, is apparently slowly dying. When the granolethic sidewalk was placed in front of the city hall it was remarked that there was too little space about the tree for its proper growth, and the prediction seems to have become a fact.

The police received a complaint on Friday from a well known citizen that the flowers he and other relatives had placed on his wife's grave had been repeatedly stolen. Many complaints of the same nature have been heard considerably of late and some steps must certainly be taken to put a stop to it.

M. Butler & Son report that the season just closed has been on the whole a most excellent one although very trying, because the late spring made everything come together; but it is over and the customers have been somehow kept satisfied.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business conditions here remain unchanged so far as the store business is concerned. Some of the dealers still report a brisk demand in cut flowers for delivery at the different state buildings in the World's Fair grounds. Others have been busy with funeral work.

The month of July is reported by some of the dealers as much better than last year. Of course, the World's Fair has a great deal to do with the increase of business this year among the florists. The plantsmen especially are much pleased with the business they have done this spring and summer, as very much more was done in the planting line. The wholesalers too are well pleased with the business they have done the past season and good prices prevailed throughout.

Stock at the present time in roses is quite plentiful but only in second grades. First-class, fancy stock is out of the question in all varieties. The price on the best roses that come in is $5 and $6 per 100. White and pink are coming in abundance; so are short American Beauties. Carnations are very poor indeed, the bulk of them being hardly salable for any use. The best are in big demand, especially the white. Colored stock has little demand except when fancy. For the best $2 is asked and 75 cents to $1.50 per 100 for the rest.

Sweet peas are very poor, owing to too much rain of late. Peas have a good demand, when good, at 25 cents per 100. Lily of the valley is at a standstill, though of extra fine quality. Among the outdoor stock, tuberoses and asters are selling well. Gladioli are slow at $2 and $3. Other outdoor truck has very little call now. Smilax and other greens are as usual.

Various Notes.

The weather in St. Louis at present is very cool. The summer has so far been in fine contrast with the season in cities where St. Louis has long been misrepresented. The deadly heat of some more northern cities is never felt here.

Max Herzog took advantage of the cool summer and was married on last Wednesday to Miss Bertha Ulrich. Only near friends and relatives attended the wedding. Congratulations are now in order and we hope Max will attend the next club meeting to receive them.

The finance committee held a meeting last Thursday at Weber's store. It can be safely said that this committee is doing its share of work. They report plenty of funds on hand for all purposes during the convention of the S. A. F. next month. This committee will meet again this week to complete arrangements.

The general entertainment committee, consisting of all the chairmen of the different committees, will meet this week Wednesday to perfect all arrangements for entertaining the S. A. F. members. President Breitmeyer, of Detroit, and Phil Hauswirth, of Chicago, are expected here this week to look over the ground.

Carl Beyer, chairman of the bowling committee, reports a great many prizes to date for the bowlers; in fact, so many that nearly everybody should carry home a prize of some kind. One of the finest among them is a large silver trophy, donated by the Anheuser Busch Brewing Association, also a fine gold medal by the Brunswick-Balke Company to be known as the champion medal. C. A. Kuehn and Henry Ostertag are also in line with prizes. Mr. Beyer, too, will donate a handsome prize.

It will be well for all the bowling captains to send in their entries, so that we can know in advance just how many teams will bowl in the tournament. The alleys have plenty of room for twelve clubs to bowl at one time, and we hope to have at least that many teams if not more. We rely on teams from Chicago, Buffalo, New York, Washington, Baltimore, Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee, Omaha, Philadelphia, Flatbush, Pittsburg and St. Louis to be with us next month and take part in the tournament.

Visitors here in the florist trade are: J. Mead, representing the Furman boilers; J. T. Goodlive, of Zanesville, O.; Mr. Huckleberry, of North Vernon, Ind.; J. Warren, of Louisville; Wm. Kutschback, of Houston, Tex.

The big floral parade on the water will take place Saturday morning at the World's Fair. The Eggeling Floral Co. has the contract to furnish the flowers for the occasion. This will be a grand affair, as twenty-five floats will be dressed in flowers. The contract calls for $15,000 and only twelve hours to do the work, starting after ten o'clock Friday night, the parade starting at ten o'clock Saturday morning.

Bowling.

The St. Louis convention team rolled a match of three games with the next five highest men of the Florists' Bowling Club. The convention team gave them a handicap of 125 pins per game, total pins to count. The convention team won by forty-two pins, as the following scores will show:

St. Louis Hotels.

The Florists' Club has issued a list of nearly 100 hotels at which accommodations may be had during the S. A. F. convention at from 50 cents per night upward, most of the rates being from $1 to $2 per night. There are ample sleeping accommodations in St. Louis at reasonable rates. But it would be wise to make arrangements in advance. Write F. M. Ellis, 1316 Pine street, chairman of the hotel committee of the St. Louis Florists' Club. Better do it today.

Seed Trade News.

Good "corn weather" is reported at most of the sections where seed corn is grown.

The onion set harvest as it progresses shows a heavy falling off from what was expected.

Cable advices from London and Paris July 23 report continued dry weather with high temperatures.

At Chicago the deficiency in precipitation thus far in 1904 in 5.53 inches and the deficiency in temperature 635 degrees.

Good reports are at hand from the radish seed sections of Michigan. The weather at present is all that can be desired.

The main shipments of Harrisii are due in a few days. The crop is generally estimated to be shorter than last year, particularly on large sizes.

Reports to date show that the blight on the cucumber vines that are intended for seed is not so noticeable as on the vines that are for the pickle men.

J. W. Ratekin, Shenandoah, Ia., says his firm has over 3,000 acres of corn growing for seed purposes, with the finest crop prospect July 25 he has seen in years.

The onion crop will be short. High prices may be looked for. Speculators are looking over the marsh fields with a view to securing the crops previous to harvest.

The government report shows an increase of 2,823,000 in the cotton acreage. If prices hold until the crop is picked business should be good in the south next season.

The situation on beans and peas is unchanged. Dry weather at points in Michigan is bad for the bean crop at this time, and wet weather at points in Wisconsin does the early peas no good.

The Chicago Dock Company, in which the Dickinsons are the principal stockholders, have sold to the Illinois Tunnel Company, for $2,500,000, the property at West Taylor street and the river, Chicago, where the office and seed warehouses of the Albert Dickinson Company are located. It is stated that the Dickinson Company will erect a fine building at South Chicago.

Last fall a western seedsman imported a lot of 300 pounds of an English pickling cucumber, which had been successfully tried in a smaller way, and it is now being grown at several pickling points in the middle west. If it gives satisfaction, the seed could last year have been had at considerably less than what American pickling sorts brought.

Reports continue to come to hand that the crop of French Romans is short and prices firm. It is reported that American orders are not numerous, but that other countries are buying freely. Failure of most growers to find a profit in this stock last year will operate to reduce this country's requirements considerably as long as present prices hold, high for the bulbs, low for the cut flowers.

CORN TO PLANT.

As may be seen from the letters we have published, there still exist differences of opinion as to whether anything more than uniform grains for planting is obtained from discarding the tip and butt kernels of field corn.

CLOVER SEED.

Henry Nungesser & Co. send out the following under date of July 19:

There has been a very good demand in crimson clover and already a large business has been done. Stocks of the crop 1903 are almost exhausted in Europe as well as in this country, and only small lots for immediate shipment are left. We are very much interested in these seeds and pay particular attention to the importation of same. We have already made arrangements for new crop to arrive here August 1, 8 and 15.

The crop in Europe was at first expected to be a large one. We find, however, that it has not turned out so well. In consequence the prices are already somewhat higher and the market is very strong, and as the demand in Europe as well as here is large, it is needless to expect lower prices. The quality of the new seed is excellent.

PANDANUS SEEDS.

F. B. Vandegrift & Co., custom house brokers, were recently in receipt of a shipment of palm and pandanus seeds mixed. A protest was made at the duty assessed, the following being the ruling of the board of appraisers:

The goods in this case were all assessed for duty at thirty per cent ad valorem under the provision for "seeds of all kinds not specially provided for" in paragraph 254 of the tariff act of 1897. The local appraiser reports that the merchandise consists of palm nuts and pandanus seeds mixed, the greater part of which are pandanus; and that as no separation was possible, they were returned as though all were pandanus seeds. The palm and pandanus appear to belong to different botanical orders, and there is nothing in the case before us which would enable us to say that the classification of pandanus seeds under paragraph 254 was not correct. Palm nuts are, by name, made free of duty under paragraph 622, and on this provision the protestants base their claim.

The proportion of palm nuts in the importation, however, has not been shown, and it is a well-established principle that collectors, where free and dutiable goods are thus commingled, may assess the entire importation at the rate applicable to the dutiable merchandise, unless the importer shows what part of the whole is not subject to duty. The protest is overruled.

Barrie, Ont.—Wm. Taylor has succeeded F. Brown as leasee of the Morgan greenhouses. He will grow carnations, chrysanthemums and bedding stock.

Albany, N. Y.—The New York Market Florists' Association has been licensed to incorporate with $5,000 capital; directors, H. C. Steinhoff and John Birnie, West Hoboken; P. F. Daley, New Durham. This is the association which proposes to build a permanent plant market in New York.

FLOW FROM RETURN.

In heating with steam, is it practical to take off a flow from a return pipe which is already established and lead the return pipes back to the main return pipe to the boiler? Is it necessary that flow pipes be overhead, or can they be strung along the side walls if properly arranged? Lack of access to a competent steam fitter causes me to ask these simple questions. C. L. W.

Yes, a flow may be taken from a return if not too far from the boiler and there is no danger of the return becoming choked by condensation. It is not advisable to do this if a flow, or riser, can be carried from a main riser or from the boiler direct. The riser, or flow, may be carried either under the ridge or along the side walls or under the benches, just as one sees fit, so long as it is properly graded and the returns which it supplies are all beneath it, so as to care for all condensation. In steam heating the highest point in the system should be as nearly directly over the boiler as possible. This provides that all condensation must pass the length of the flow pipe, enter the returns and thus find its way back to the boiler. All this is simply a matter of grading the pipes. The greater the difference between the height of the riser and returns the better, everything else considered. L. C. C.

Richmond, Ind.—H. M. Altick, of Dayton, O., was here July 12 to procure the arrest of one Wm. Jones, accused of burglarizing Mr. Altick's home and attacking Mr. Altick more than a year ago. The man's whereabouts had just been discovered.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during the last week has been slow and some of our florists claim it is even worse than last year, while others say they are about even with last year's trade. I think a considerable damper was put on trade by a few very hot days. This week demand appears to be better and the temperature a little more reasonable.

Amongst growers, we find them nearly all busy planting. Although no roses of new stock are coming in yet, some of the growers tell us they expect to be cutting early in August. The supply of carnations is shortening. Outdoor stock is coming in quite plentifully.

Various Notes.

A. Gilchrist, Toronto Junction, had his chimney struck by lightning one day last week and considerable damage done.

Chas. Tidy, of S. Tidy & Sons, is at present on his vacation and does not expect to be back until the second week in August.

The Toronto Gardeners' and Florists' Association has been invited by the Dale estate to visit the establishment at Brampton on August 3, and I understand it has accepted the invitation and will make it the annual picnic and outing.

LETTUCE IN HOTBED.

I have a piece of ground 30x120 on which I wish to build a greenhouse or houses. The exposure is good, but the drainage poor; cannot go more than five feet below the floor. Have natural gas for fuel and want to heat with hot water. The main crops will be carnations and lettuce. Could I build a house twenty-two feet wide with four benches and three walks, putting the lettuce in a hot-bed on the east side of the house with two 1-inch hot water pipes covered with tile in the bottom of the bed? Would the hot-bed work for a first crop, say from November to January, and again in early spring to meet the outdoor crop. C. E. S.

I see no reason why your plan to build one house as described should not work all right with the hot-bed for lettuce. But I would not put the pipes in the bottom of the bed, as lettuce does better with the roots cooler than the overhead temperature. Two 1-inch hot-water pipes seem rather little to maintain a growing temperature during zero weather, which we are apt to get even in December. Though they will struggle along at a lower temperature, to keep them growing as they ought to grow about 45 degrees by night is necessary. I would suggest that you put two pipes of the size mentioned along each side of the pit about one foot above the level of the soil. This would not only insure you against all weather, but, with such an arrangement, lettuce could be grown right through the winter if desired. W. S. CROYDON.

VEGETABLES UNDER GLASS.

Writing of a trip to the vicinity of Boston last fall, Charles H. Black, of Hightstown, N. J., says:

At Belmont we visited the place of Hitter Bros., one of whom conducted us through the houses. He was a gentleman who knew his business, and not afraid of work. Several large houses mostly 50x300 and 600 feet, glazed with large double thick glass. One house 50x600 feet, planted in tomatoes in rows three feet apart, trained to single stems, and full of fruit from bloom to half grown. One house just set in lettuce, and one or two smaller houses of tomatoes, were all that were planted. What was strange and interesting to me, was the mode of culture. The houses have all solid beds about three feet deep of rich soil and manure. I was informed by Mr. Hitter that after each crop the beds were spaded over and thoroughly pulverized, then a heavy dressing of partially rotted stable manure was worked in and the beds thoroughly saturated with water, and when in proper condition planted and not wet again during the time of the crop's growth; the plants are not even wet when transplanted. I asked how they made small, tender lettuce plants live without water or shade? I was told that it was not necessary, that a lettuce plant could not be killed very easily. I suppose the plants must assume the hardy character of the Yankee. I would expect the plants to die with me under such treatment. The tomatoes were treated in the same manner. The plants were about three feet high, and in perfect health. The top soil seemed like dry dust, but the deep, rich, mellow bed seemed to supply everything needed. This method I thought appeared better than sub-irrigation. One house 50x600 feet was certainly evidence enough of the success of this treatment. Sometimes two crops of lettuce are grown without water. Everything showed intensive culture.

PACIFIC COAST.

ARAUCARIAS.

The araucaria family furnishes us with some of the most beautiful specimen trees we have on this coast. They are all noted for their symmetrical appearance and as an avenue tree they have no equals. Araucaria excelsa, A. Bidwilli, A. Cunninghami, A. Cooki, A. Braziliensis and A. imbricata are perfectly hardy in this latitude. They are all easily grown from seed, if the seed be fresh, for, unlike many of the large conifers, it is not a good keeper. When I stated that as a family they are hardy I should add that A. excelsa, A. Cooki and A. Cunninghami will not stand over a few degrees of frost until they are established several years in the open ground. I have lost them in extra cold winters even when they had attained five or six feet in height. Consequently it is a good plan to cover up these varieties during the coldest weather. Araucaria Bidwilli is hardy but does not like a superabundance of moisture during the rainy season, and if it is planted in such a location that the drainage is not ample it has a habit of browning badly on the foliage.

Araucaria imbricata is perfectly hardy and is considered the finest variety. It grows here to a height of fifty feet and specimen plants are always in good demand at big prices. A fifteen-foot tree easily brings $150 and very few of them are offered at any price. They are of slow growth until they get fairly well grown, when they stretch out much faster in proportion than when they are small. They are easily grown from seed and also from cuttings. With the latter it takes them usually six months to root well, but they quickly make a vigorous plant when raised this way.

Araucaria excelsa, if a little hardier, would be an ideal lawn tree. Araucaria Braziliensis is a beautiful tree and of fairly rapid growth. It is very susceptible to water at the root and must be planted in a situation where the drainage is good. It is easily grown from cuttings and makes a vigorous plant in much less time than one that is grown from seed. Araucaria Cooki makes a very large and showy specimen and is much finer foliage than the variety I have just spoken of. It is not extensively grown here in recent years, seed being very difficult to obtain.

Seed of all the araucaria family is obtained principally from Australia, and unless it is shipped perfectly fresh it is usually of no account when it gets here. Many seasons it is impossible to procure some sorts, and although we have had fair success the past few years, I do not think there is any danger of these beautiful evergreens becoming too plentiful. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

We are having continued cool weather and, in fact, the entire coast is having an unusual summer. On Friday morning we were treated to a small shower, the first that has fallen in this month in a great many years. I think this favors the florists considerably, as well as the growers, as reports from the various summer resorts show that the people are slowly coming back to town, the weather along the seashore and in the mountains being too cold to be enjoyable. It is much more satisfactory for the retailers to handle stock in such weather as we have had for the past two months than in the kind we expect at this season. Cut flowers keep fully as long now as they do at any time of the year, and the growers are able to cut flowers of better color and substance than they usually do in June, July and August. Lilium album and rubrum have made their appearance and their advent is always welcomed by the retailers. They are splendid keepers, eagerly bought by the public, and make a good showing in the windows, something we have sorely needed for some time. They are selling wholesale at $2.50 per dozen. Roses are scarce and are in good demand. Many of the growers are drying out their houses. Carnations are plentiful again and of good quality. Some of our largest growers are cutting quantities of Enchantress at present. Asters are coming in slowly. I think we will have a good succession of flowers for several months. Sweet peas are still very plentiful. Sweet sultan is being brought in by several growers and sells readily at from 75 cents to $1 per hundred stems. Golden coreopsis is another article that is in good demand and sells at 75 cents per dozen bunches. Double white dahlias are very handy to have to use in funeral work. Smilax is in season, but the strings are short and soft. Some very good outside Cecil Brunner roses are coming in. This rose does very well in the summer. It wants an abundance of moisture and the flowers should be kept picked off to get the best results.

DETROIT.

Various Notes.

On last Wednesday, July 20, the annual outing and picnic of the Detroit Florists' Club was held at Bois Blanc park, and it was the largest in point of attendance of any, there being over 100 present, and a most beautiful day. The committee in charge had prepared an excellent program. There was but one thing that marred the enjoyment of the occasion and that was the absence of the members who reside in Mt. Clemens. But one of them can be excused, for Jas. Taylor is building himself a house in which to entertain his friends and care for his large family of children.

There has been a general complaint about Detroit for some time of the lack of rain, several of the florists in the suburbs being entirely without water, but on Thursday a heavy rain helped out and cooled off the atmosphere.

The delegation to St. Louis will be a light one in number, but heavy in weight, as it will consist of President Breitmeyer, Wm. Dilger, J. F. Sullivan and son and possibly one or two others, all heavyweights, who can afford to lose some flesh. The thin ones, all being afraid of the heat in St. Louis, have decided not to go.

There is not much business for the grower just now, but there is plenty of work in planting, repairing, etc. Some carnations are being housed, Rackham having finished last week, with a very fine lot of plants. Rag.

How the Cut Fronds shipped across the Atlantic.

With reference to a quantity of fronds sent to Liverpool, Eng., the recipient writes from that port, June 17 1904, as follows: "The ferns were as fresh as when they were first cut and I believe you can safely send them to Europe, provided they are as carefully packed as these were. They are simply perfect." [Signed] THOMAS R. PROCTOR.

BUTTE, MONT.

The cut flower business is at a standstill at present. The greenhouse force is doing the hustling stunt. At Gregson, the pipes formerly were under the benches, too close for the roses. Now they are being put on the sides of the house, hung around. The pipes have been in use four years and it was predicted that they would corrode with the natural hot water from the springs. They were just as clean as when put in. Mr. Day claims this comes from keeping the pipes filled up all the time. As usual their carnations are very fine. Mr. Day speaks of the wonders Lawson has done the past season.

A trip to the Columbia gardens was well worth the writer's time. Up to within the last two weeks they have been having frost up there. The pansy beds are fine; never saw any better, and the stocks and snapdragon are all that could be expected. The geraniums are not so good. The lawns look good. Mr. Siegel has planted hundreds of Canadian poplars and they are doing well. At the houses he has beautiful begonias. A bench in the center of the house is a profusion of blooms. He is still cutting from his carnation house, some very fine Enchantress and Lawson. He has a stephanotis vine in full bloom. Three years ago he received, among a lot of Beauty plants from Chicago, a climbing rose which is a beautiful thing. It has a flower shaped on the order of President Carnot, about two shades darker than Testout, about the size of a large Beauty and a continuous bloomer. Mr. Siegel has tried his best to find out what it is, but no one seems to know it. If unnamed, it may be called Senator W. A. Clark.

M. Law has returned from Spokane. He will open an up-to-date store there this fall. Elmer Law is in Salt Lake at present, where he expects to locate.

Wm. Hendrickson, at Missoula, will have some fine gladioli, sweet peas and phlox to ship soon.

The Columbia gardens, if present plans are carried out, will have an entirely new range of houses this fall.

Sylvester Hansen, who has charge of W. A. Clark, Jr.'s houses, will devote one house entirely to orchids this season.

A cloudburst on the flats gave the boys at the old Law plant quite a scare last week. Not much damage was done.

The State Nursery has a stand in one of the Park street restaurants and has a nice display window.

The Montana Florists' Club has elected the following officers: President, O. A. C. Oehmler; vice-president, Charles W. Wilson; secretary, A. C. Wilhelm; treasurer, Victor Siegel; directors, James H. King, N. N. McNamee and Sylvester Hansen. A committee consisting of Jacob Seitz, S. Hansen and C. W. Wilson, was appointed to promote the interests of Montana horticulturists. The club proposes to hold a picnic at the gardens next month and appointed a committee to arrange for the affair.

The Market.

One could not make a report on the market, as there is apparently nothing in the market. Asters are still very scarce, the same with carnations and roses hardly worth mentioning; in fact, we are in the worst of the summer season as far as cut flower men are concerned.

There was some business in funeral work last week owing to the death of Thos. S. Biglow; many designs and bunches of flowers of all kinds were used. The retailers do not seem to complain very much, as they think better times are coming, as things are brightening up in the iron industries and mills are starting, so it is only a question of a little time until money is more plentiful and trade will be accordingly good. Many of the boys are taking advantage of the summer dullness and are taking vacations.

Various Notes.

Mr. McClements, of Randolph & McClements, is reported sick at his farm at Bakerstown. Sam is a breeder of fancy stock in Shetland ponies as a kind of diversion from his decorative business.

Walter Breitenstein is spending much of his leisure time canoeing on the waters at home, and with an occasional jaunt through the woods he manages to keep himself sunburned and happy.

T. P. Langhans, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., with his family and a party of friends, has gone to Bobcaygeon, Canada, for a fishing spell.

John Bader is back from Atlantic City. He is a Shriner and went with the Shriners. Nuff-Ced.

Geo. L. Huscroft, of Steubenville, O., is an Elk, and went to Cincinnati with the Elks. Well, he got back.

John Baldinger, of T. M. Ulam & Co., who was laid up with the rheumatism, is able to attend to business again.

Primula Poisoning.

The writer having lately been severely poisoned, and not having come in contact with any poison ivy, Rhus toxicodendron, ascribes the cause to Primula obconica. The symptoms of the poisoning were those characteristic of Rhus toxicodendron, viz., forming of vesicles or small blisters which, after scratching, because so awfully itchy, will run together, forming larger sores, at the same time increasing in number and attacking other parts of the body, causing bad swellings and, putting it mildly, giving much discomfort.

Now I wish to know what the experience is, of other florists, in regard to the poisonous effects of Primula obconica. Almost after every handling of these plants I notice an itching on my hands, but not being severe, do not pay much attention to it. But this last time, my face getting the worst of it, causes me to ask the opinion of the florists, not about my face, to be sure, but of the advisability of running the chances with our customers in selling them such poisonous plants, for surely one could bring a good damage suit against the florist who did so. A. M.

Various Notes.

Regarding the new pest of the chrysanthemum described on page 380 of the issue for July 21, it seems to be the same pest that infests my asters. No use to say any more.

If Herman Schlachter wants to be rid of the spite fence described by him July 21, let the parties put their switch through and the fence will be removed, I can assure him.

To-day, July 22, it was 69 degrees at St. Louis at 7 a. m., and 76 degrees at noon. Not such a hot town, is it?
CHAS. JUENGEL.

GALESBURG, ILL.—Gesler & Drury have finished benching 14,000 carnation plants.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.—Joseph V. Pierce has gone to Elmira, N. Y., to take charge of a section for the United States Cut Flower Co. He is a well-liked young man and a good grower.

HEATING ADDITION.

We have three greenhouses, each sixty feet long, one twelve feet wide, one sixteen feet and one twenty feet. We are heating with a No. 16 Hitchings boiler. We are now extending all the houses to eighty feet. Would it be safe to heat them with the same boiler? During the past winter when the temperature outside was 20 degrees below zero we held the temperature at 60 degrees in one house and 52 degrees in others. D. & C.

To maintain a temperature of 60 degrees in your completed house, i. e., those eighty feet long, it will require a boiler with a capacity to carry about 1,400 feet of radiation, or a boiler with at least 150 feet of heating surface. I do not have the rating of the Hitchings No. 16 at hand, but the makers will furnish this information on application.

The too frequent rains, continually cloudy and uncertain weather in this locality has somewhat retarded the growth of the carnations and other plants which were set out in the field. A week of good, sunny weather, such as we get every once in a while, to remind us that it is summer, would set the plants to rights again.

At the E. G. Hill Company's plant work is progressing rapidly. All of the roses for fall and winter blooms are now benched and are in fine condition. Besides the two houses 400 feet long which are devoted to roses, another house 200 feet long has been filled with roses for winter blooms.

Five benches 200 feet long are filled with Mr. Hill's very promising and favorite seedling, Etna. It is a remarkable grower and is constantly making those much wanted breaks at the bottom which give the fine, firm stem so prettily setting off the blooms. It looks as if it will prove all that Mr. Hill desires it to be.

Four benches 200 feet long are filled with the English rose which captured the prize of $50 at the Indianapolis show last fall. This is also an excellent grower and is doing well.

Two large frames have recently been built for potted mums. A new propagating house will soon be put up. It will be used for propagating rose cuttings only.

Ed. Ruch is building two houses 100 feet long which he will plant to carnations. His place is situated on the National road just opposite the Hill range.

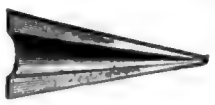
MILWAUKEE, WIS., February, 1904.

Please give me your price on two No. 7 and one No. 6 Boilers. I saw your advertisement for early orders and I want to get that discount. I have run one of your No. 6 boilers now for ten years and I did not put one cent to it for repairs. That is a record. How much money do you want down on each boiler to bind the order? Please send me a catalogue.

GUST BUDZIEN, 599 2nd Ave.



GLEN ELLYN, ILL., Jan. 27, 1903.

The No. 2 Boiler bought of you last Fall has given me entire satisfaction. The two coldest days this winter, with the temperature 15 below zero and a howling wind at 60 miles an hour, have kept the water at a boiling point and that with only two-thirds of the grate covered with live coal. This is my boiler when I need more.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettic.

BEGINNINGS IN DESIGN...

A SWEET PEA DESIGN.

A Flat Cluster From Nature.

Frequent application may be made of the principle laid down in the first of this series as to where to obtain designs for flat clusters. Remembering from what source we traced the design of the rose bunch from the general character of the stem, leaf and flower arrangement of a single rose, we will consider today a similar application of the same law. Take a single spray of sweet peas. Follow the simple outline and get a general idea of the form which the flowers take. See it with your eyes shut, then fashion in your mind a cluster of sweet peas which takes the same general form as this outlined flower presents. Will it not look something like the cluster illustrated?

Forming the Cluster.

Now as to the most convenient way to arrange such a bunch as the above. Suppose we are to use from 200 to 500 peas in the cluster, the upper spurs of the cluster can be lengthened to several times the original measurement and the lower branch in proportion. Plan to make the spray in several pieces and then finish by fastening them together. Select a number of branches of the pea vine from twelve to about thirty inches long. Fasten two or three together lengthwise by wrapping with No. 36 wire. If this foundation should not appear strong enough to hold the cluster, stiffen it by slipping in a heavy rose stem, but do not allow the rose stem to interfere with the natural bend of the pea vine. Prepare another strong stem of the same kind for the left side of the bunch. For the right upper lobe of the cluster select a stem with tendrils, foliage and buds which curve toward the left as in the illustration, and for the opposite branch, a stem which bends to the right.

If the bunch is to be made of assorted colors, begin at the top of the branches with the most delicate tints and as you fasten the flowers down the stem, blend the colors from tint at the top to shade at the base. With a bunch of fine wire in hand begin to slip in at rare intervals among the tendrils and small foliage of the upper part of the vine, a few of the pea blossoms. Wrap the flower stems securely with one or two rounds of the wire, in among the foliage where the wire cannot be seen, and proceed downward, making the cluster heavier and the flowers closer until the first vine is covered with flowers.

Follow Nature.

Of course it is in place here to say, be natural. But just how to be natural in this work must be attained by slow stages and close observation. As you have opportunity study the arrangement of the foliage and flowers on the vine as it grows. Apply such knowledge as you gain from time to time at the first opportunity, and it will become second nature to you to make clusters after these hitherto unapproached patterns.

Complete the opposite branch of the cluster in the same way.

Joining the Parts.

About half way down the length of each branch draw the clusters close enough together to fasten them without crossing; that is, wire them side by side to each other at their center points, and allow the lower ends of the clusters to spread outwards from each other. Add plenty of foliage, especially at the center and around the wire ties. If the bunch should be so large as to be unwieldy, add strong rose stems underneath. If other than the natural green is necessary, smilax or Asparagus Sprengeri will be found a pretty addition. Ribbon may be added or not, according to taste; but if used, it should be narrow, with an abundance of short loops and ends.

As to Colors.

To such an extent does a single color tone run through many of the varieties of sweet peas that one may almost paint a rainbow with their soft hues. This one color tone is the trace of purple found either nearly pure or in composition. The one striking member of this symphony would be the brilliant yellowish salmon which is too trying to combine with the purples, crimson pinks and delicate violets. Use this pink with the greenish cream which is found in many of the so-called white varieties of sweet peas.

The Natural Form for the Sweet Pea Bunch.

SWEET PEAS.

Please give full instructions in regard to growing sweet peas under glass: soil, temperature for winter blooming, when to plant, whether in ground or on benches?

H. L. H.

Written instructions, unless backed up by the grower's own good judgment, are worthless. This sweet pea growing is like several other of the florists' crops, not yet a fixed or absolute method and, therefore, although observant, the writer would hardly like his advice to be considered infallible.

Sweet peas outdoors in summer should have the greatest depth and richness of soil that it is practicable to give them, because you want them to be enduring. In the greenhouse this is not the object. Earliness in flowering is the great point in view. Whether in a low bed or a raised bench, six inches of soil is all that should be given them.

On Sunday, July 31, we thought a good way to celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of our first squeak in this world would be to visit the mammoth place of the Lake View Rose Gardens, Jamestown, N. Y., of which I am going to have something to say later. A house 20x200 was empty. "What's going in here, Mr. Roney?" "Sweet peas." And he plants them in rows three feet apart and sows the seed the end of this month and says he can flower them in seven weeks. That style of sweet pea growing I am not at all conversant with. Here is what I have seen most successful:

Sow a few seeds in 4-inch pots. After they are up thin out to three plants. If you are doing nothing with the bench you can sow the seeds on the bench, but usually the sweet peas succeed mums on the bench. Let the rows be at least eighteen inches apart across the bench and, if sown, the plants should not be nearer than three inches. If put into the bench from pots, then a clump of three plants one foot apart will be right. The original growth should be encouraged to grow up and should be trained up a string, just as you would smilax. All lateral or bottom growth should be kept pinched off, or it will entirely overwhelm the first growth, which would, if encouraged, give you the early blooms. Fifty degrees at night is the temperature. A little below that will not hurt and the greatest amount of light you can give them. W. S.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Transplanting Evergreens.

C. W. Ward was quoted very recently as saying that evergreens could be transplanted from the middle of August to the end of September and even in October, but he much preferred transplanting in the spring. Undoubtedly the month of May in our northern states is the best of all times, yet any time in August evergreens can be moved with perfect safety. We will, under favorable conditions, include the two first weeks of September, but don't go beyond that. To transplant a Colorado blue spruce or Austrian pine in October would be sure death unless you could lift it with a perfect ball of earth and without the loss of a fibre.

Circumstances alter cases. Nurserymen are growing more honest and able. The man who used to plant a row of Norway spruces when they were six inches high, leaving them untouched for five or six years and selling them when they were four feet high, will soon be a relic of past civilization. Nurserymen are now transplanting their evergreens, so that with decent, intelligent care, there is a good prospect of your saving a great majority of them. No matter how favorable the time, or if watering, mulching and every other attention be given, you can't keep alive one of those trees that has lost every working root and fibre in lifting.

If you have occasion to move evergreens, do it at once. See that fine soil is in contact with all the roots. When the soil is filled in to within six inches of the surface, give them a thorough soaking and when the water has soaked away, fill in with the dry soil and on top of that a mulch of two or three inches of stable litter is most beneficial.

All this seems quite a performance, but to water on the surface and then allow the ground to bake, is really a little worse than nothing. The whole secret of successful transplanting is the avoidance of loss of roots. How easily the greenhouse man shifts a plant from a 2-inch to a 4-inch or an 8-inch to a 12-inch pot without the loss of a tender leaf, because no root or fibre is lost or bruised. This is impossible in moving an elm or Norway spruce, but the nearer you approach, so relatively will be the measure of your success.

Propagating Geraniums.

Some people begin propagating zonale geraniums early in August. Those who have tried it have learned to be wiser. It's too hot and in applying enough water to keep them from drying up, they go off with what we call the black rot, which I suppose is a bursting of the walls of the cellular tissue and the decay which must ensue. Wait until September.

By the middle of this month and for a few weeks later is the proper and best time to propagate the show and fancy pelargoniums, often called Lady Washington. I suppose pelargonium is the correct generic name of all our geraniums and in Europe they are generally known as zonale pelargoniums, show pelargoniums, etc., but here in this expansive and expanding country, the old familiar name, geranium, is so firmly fixed that it would take a century to amend it.

Lady Washington is harmless if you like it, but Beefsteak geranium in place of Rex begonia is slightly depressing; in fact, it is worse than the interpretation of a young Irishman, who was once in my employ for about seven and a half days. I told him to carry the begonias into the shed and after he had accomplished the effort, he reported that the "Bigonions were all in."

The Show Pelargoniums.

After flowering, the show pelargoniums make a strong growth. By the end of July that growth is about matured and somewhat ripened and if water has been sparingly given for the last two or three weeks, so much the better. When you cut down a pelargonium for propagating, cut it down. Leave only two or three inches of the old stem. There will be eyes and breaks that were not visible to the naked eye. Keep your old plants almost, if not quite, dry until they are covered with signs of a new growth, which will be in about three weeks. Then shake off every particle of old soil. Trim back the ends of the roots and repot in a smaller pot than they flowered in.

The cuttings from this cut-down plant will root either singly in 2-inch pots, or in the sand in the ordinary propagating house. Remember the cuttings are somewhat ripened and they do not need a lot of water. The amount of water you would give a batch of chrysanthemums or poinsettias in the sand at this date would rot the pelargoniums. Almost any part of the plant will root, hard or soft. In fact, in the earliest half of the last century, I remember a good old gardener propagating these showy plants from pieces of the root almost as we do bouvardias.

Decline of the Pelargonium.

That landmark of horticulture in America, Peter Henderson, says in his book, "Practical Floriculture," that if he were compelled or had no opportunity to grow but one plant his choice would be the show pelargonium. If this great, good and shrewd man were alive today, he would not say that, because our climate does not suit it as does that of the British Isles. The English gardener or nurseryman shows a plant in a 10-inch pot that is six feet in diameter, as perfect in outline as an umbrella in a shower, a great triumph of art and industry, but there is no call for that here and the decline and fall of the show pelargonium is simply explained by the fact that the zonale pelargonium has been so wonderfully developed in size, color and all other desirable attributes that the dear old pelargonium by which we made many an honest dollar (mostly spent) has dropped into oblivion. Grow a few, if it is only to find out that you are not much of a gardener after all.

The Poinsettias.

We often allude to the poinsettia because we think we know all about it, having grown it quite successfully for very many years and traveled with that progressive organization known as the Gardeners' and Florists' National Protective Federation of Labor.

Never allow your early propagated plants to become what is called pot-bound. You must shift them. If cut blooms are wanted, then there is nothing so good as to plant them on a bench in six inches of heavy, rich soil. A poinsettia that has plenty of food at the root will endure 10 degrees lower temperature than a starved plant in a pot. You hear occasionally some Mr. Vernon say: "My poinsetts didn't do very well; I ain't got heat enough." He had heat enough, but the plants were starved.

This month, even the end of it, is an excellent time to put in cuttings for plants to make the pans which are now the most important feature of the poinsettia business. There is a hint here. Don't attempt to put them in the pan from the sand, because some will be stronger or more vigorous than others. After being in 2½-inch pots for a week or two, you can select half a dozen of similar strength and propensity and so your pans will be a success. However much nature and, incidentally, an artist hates a straight line, the public loves a show, however gaudy, and your pans of poinsettias should be of uniform height, size and quality.

Lorraine Begonias.

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is now an established Christmas plant. Our experience with it as a house plant is not favorable, but we have heard other accounts and if its life in the dining room is ephemeral it matters not, because it is more beautiful than any bunch of cut flowers can possibly be and will last longer. Why it loses its leaves quickly in the writer's dining room is perhaps accounted for by the fact that we heat and illuminate with natural gas and intercommunicate our views and impressions of life, past, present and prospective, also by gas more deadly even than the strange subterranean product.

This beautiful plant will now be making active growth and you can still put in cuttings. The plants rooted now will make excellent medium-sized plants for midwinter. The begonia is the most mixed and hybridized plant we grow, next to the pelargonium, and if the Maker of all things was to make a flying visit to this little sphere, He would hardly recognize Gloire de Lorraine as a product of His creation.

You will notice that Lorraine makes its most rapid and healthy growth after the end of September, which is proof that it wants, or likes, a temperate degree of heat. Give all the ventilation you possibly can and if you can shade with a lath shading or, better still, with a cheese-cloth shading that can be applied when the sun shines and rolled up when Old Sol's under the weather, you will have a great help toward growing this choice plant.

Label the Cannas.

This is an excellent time to label any cannas in your field that are not what you intended to be there. When in flower you know them. When October's chilly blast has shriveled up the tropical foliage they are like the coons, they all look alike, and only an expert can distinguish the dry roots. It's annoying to plant a bed of 100 cannas for a customer, supposing all David Harums, and find in July that Mme. Crozy has sneaked into the same bed to flirt with him. It was written in the Gardeners' Chronicle some thirty years ago that a famous camellia grower of Belgium could name a thousand varieties of camellias by their leaves. That's prodigious, as Dominie Sampson would say. We once knew thirty or forty zonale geraniums by their foliage, but that day is past and now we know better the colors of the riders. To encumber your brain with any such detail is cruelty to animals.

"DON'T think for a minute that I would do without the REVIEW."—T. E. GUY, Arlington, O.

HANCOCK, MICH.—Much curiosity has been aroused by the advertisement of a local florist in which he offers 10 cents each for 200 toads. Investigation develops that he wants them for his greenhouse to use as insect destroyers.

VISIT WITH A PEONY KING.

July 12 I had the pleasure of visiting H. A. Terry, of Crescent, Iowa. It was his seventy-eighth birthday. The years sit lightly on his shoulders, for he is an active man, at work early and late, besides keeping up a wide correspondence.

Mr. Terry has given the world some fifty kinds of improved plums, but his greatest achievement has been in producing about 100 new and choice peonies. I have about the same number of his and of Kelway's, and after growing them side by side for years, have come to the conclusion that the main difference is that Kelway has used the most printers' ink.

For nearly thirty-five years this man has been quietly at work, and never till this summer has he had a photograph taken of his new creations. The accompanying picture gives the grand old man in the realm of beauty which he has called forth.

Mr. Terry has not reaped much of a harvest from all these years of hard toil, for he is one in whom the commercial spirit is entirely dormant, despite the best efforts of his friends to awaken an appreciation of the business possibilities which lie at his hand.

SUMMER-FLOWERING ROSES.

Summer flowering roses, such as Kaiserin, Ivory, Meteor and any other varieties which may be found suitable for this purpose and which have been planted and received the proper treatment with this purpose in view, will during the hot weather require especial care and attention in the matter of feeding and watering. By carefully observing and attending to their wants in these essentials, the size and quality of bloom can in a great measure be retained till cool weather again approaches, whereas the least neglect may allow deterioration to set in, which is hard to check.

We have found it of great advantage to sprinkle bone flour on the surface of the soil before applying the mulch, which ought to be of a rather rich nature at this season. Two parts of well decomposed cow manure to one part of fibrous sod, thoroughly incorporated and made rather fine, is a safe and effective mulch. This should be spread rather thicker than the earlier summer mulch, so that the roots may derive some benefit from the cooling effect. We have frequently put it on one and one-half inches thick with good results.

As the mulch becomes exhausted frequent applications of liquid food should be made. The safest and best form of liquid food is that which is procured from the cow barn. This should be put into a tank and allowed to stand until fermentation has begun, when it should be drained off and reduced to the required strength before using.

This form of food is readily assimilable and contains nearly all the elements of plant life in their proper proportions and contains very little of the caustic properties so observable in chemical preparations. This can with all safety be applied to such crops once a week during the hot weather. RIBES.

LIBERTY.

We would like to know the treatment for Liberty rose as regards night and day temperature: Will it do with 56 to 58 degrees at night and 60 to 62 degrees in the daytime? This will be our first season with it and we shall appreciate any advice which will assist in our success. B. & W.

The temperature at which Liberty has done best with us has been 58 to 60 degrees at night, with a day temperature varying from 65 to 80 degrees, according to intensity of sunshine.

This rose, being of rather an erratic character, has in many cases failed to respond to the treatment under which it has formerly done well, and in consequence many good growers fight rather shy of it.

As it requires very little excuse for taking a rest during winter, the aim of the grower should be to keep it in a vigorous growing condition all the time. This can be accomplished by using stimulants frequently and judiciously and, as when in health it is a strong grower and a heavy feeder, it requires more water and nutriment than Bridesmaid.

When disbudding the stems should be cut close to the last two eyes, thus securing only the best and strongest for future flower stems. Being rather subject to black spot, ventilation has to be carefully attended to and should at all times be ample.

This is one of the roses which in most cases is more productive when carried over a second season if properly handled.

A NEW BEGONIA.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of a new and strikingly variegated begonia which was discovered in 1901 by H. G. Wolfgang at the establishment of the Templin Co., Calla, O. It will shortly be introduced to the trade as Begonia Templinii, although botanically it would be B. phyllomaniaca variegata. It makes an upright growth of from two to three feet and the leaves are from six to ten inches long, with wavy margin. The foliage is glossy green blotched with varying shades of yellow, tinged with flesh pink deepening to rich crimson, the reverse coppery crimson. In winter and spring there is a profusion of light pink flowers. The variety is easily propagated, from leaf or stem cuttings or from the adventitious growth which characterizes B. phyllomaniaca. It is not only a very striking greenhouse plant but is a good bedder, standing the full sun well on the grounds of the Templin Co.

There is a steadily increasing demand for the ginkgo for street planting.

Onarga, Ill.—Ludwig Mosbaek is planning to add several houses to his plant here.

Waveland, Ind.—Geo. Grim has sold his greenhouse to Charles Grimes, who will remove it to Russellville.

Maysville, Ky.—C. B. Dieterich & Bro. have moved their flower store into new quarters in Odd Fellows' row.

GENERAL NOTES.

Watchfulness the Watchword.

Just now the plants are growing rapidly and the chief work is to keep them clean, well tied up, suckers, side shoots and dead leaves removed and such similar work as may be necessary. Watch the under side of the foliage for red-spider and if you find any traces of it, which you most likely will, put a sprayer on your hose and clean it out. Spider is very often present on the foliage when the individual in charge of the plants has no idea of it.

Blackfly should be kept down by fumigation and remember it is far better to fumigate lightly several times than to smoke heavily once and burn the tender foliage. It is a fact apparently not generally known that if the foliage is sprayed over so that every leaf is moist no harm to the foliage will result, even with a comparatively heavy smoking.

Caterpillars are, as usual, numerous enough. They disfigure the foliage so much that it is necessary to clean them out as soon as possible and the only effective way I have so far found is hand picking.

I have not heard of or seen any rust on plants this year, so we may conclude that its day is over. A spraying with sulphide of potassium, as so often recommended in these notes, will not do any harm, particularly if the foliage is showing a disposition to leaf spot. Prevention is always better than cure.

Taking the Buds.

Early buds are being taken on the early flowering varieties, such as Fitzwygram, Bergmann, etc. It is too early yet to begin to take buds on the great majority of varieties, though an expert is run across here and there who has begun to sit up and take notice and has a few taken on kinds that experience has shown him will be too late if allowed to run on for another bud. Such kinds would include C. J. Salter, F. S. Vallis and the Carnots.

That grand pink, Duckham, will develop from a bud taken the first week in August, but I would not recommend it except to those who want to get into the market first, as it would come too early for exhibition and a bud that will show in about three weeks' time will give a larger, broader-petaled flower and deeper in color. Duckham is proving itself one of the best doers ever sent out, reports from all over the country showing it to be making fine, clean growth.

The early flowering varieties, of course, are naturally inclined to come all right from the early buds, and may be taken from now on with safety. In the early class I would place Bergmann, Opah, Fitzwygram, Marquis de Montmort and Alice Byron. I have had flowers of Byron produced from buds taken August 8 that compared favorably with any white I ever grew and were in fine shape for cutting by October 1.

For the benefit of the new men in the mum business we will endeavor to elucidate the question of buds as clearly as possible in the next issue, several letters having reached me during the past week on this subject.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Treatment After Housing.

Directly plants are housed and until well established there should be no let up in the exercise of every detail, however small, that will in any way contribute toward their becoming accustomed to the new quarters. I do not wish you to infer that after getting established they can be left to themselves, but to lay particular stress on the importance of careful handling during this period.

Observance of the change from the certain raw appearance of plants fresh from the field, to the finished look of vigorous growing stock under glass leads us to inquire the reason of this transformation. The bench soil, being much richer than that in the field, has an influence, but during the first week or ten days very little nourishment can be taken up by the roots. Practically the plant exists by drawing on its own supply of stored energy, supplemented by what is absorbed by the foliage from the atmosphere, which, being very different under glass, works a change, the plant adapting itself to conditions as found and the better these conditions are suited to the plants the sooner this great change is accomplished. This is where the grower's attention to details counts for much.

Spray the plants several times during the day, according to the weather, arranging to have the foliage dry over night. Should the weather be cloudy during and for a few days after planting the foliage will probably hold up well and you may conclude the plants are getting finely established, but be ready to spray when the sun appears, for the chances are more wilting will occur than if the weather had been fine.

In this connection it may be well to state that heavy shading will produce the same effect. I believe light shading is advisable, but would not recommend its removal all at once. Commence on the glass through which the first rays of the morning sun strike, gradually working toward the part it shines through during the hottest time of day, removing a portion each day.

By spraying I do not mean syringing, which is a very different operation and detrimental to the plants. To spray properly a strong force of water is not needed. Have a moderate stream running through the hose and with thumb or finger, create a fine spray directed well up over, not at, the plants. Have it so fine that it will fall on the foliage in the form of mist.

Wet the paths and space under the benches to help lower the temperature. Constant change of air is necessary, but this must be accomplished without perceptible draughts directly on the plants. Watch the bench soil closely, as some parts may dry out sooner than others.

As soon as a house is well under way a light fumigation is in order, as there is liability of insect enemies being brought in on the plants.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Benching During Drouth.

We are having a splendid object lesson this season on the advantage of benching carnations during a dry spell. After having plenty of rain up to July 10, we have been having it dry since that time and the ground is getting quite dry. Most of the plants, especially those which were planted early, were of fair size by that time and these three weeks of drouth have matured the growth so that the plants are about half dormant and there is almost no wilting at all after the digging. The plants are hungry for water and food and it takes them only two or three days to take hold of the soil and very little syringing is necessary after the third day. Instead of wishing for a rain now, which is needed badly for other crops, we are tempted to wish for a continuance of the drouth until we can finish our carnation planting.

If you have your beds ready to plant, don't make the mistake of waiting for a rain before digging, but start in at once and plant all you can before a rain sets in and softens the growth again. After planting a certain amount of overhead syringing is necessary, but be careful that you do not overdo it. Stop it just as soon as the plants will bear up without it. Too much syringing will start stem-rot into activity, if there is any of that fungus present, and it also tends to sour the soil and cause a green scum to form on top. Just as early as possible reduce the sprinkling to dampening the walks, which will help wonderfully to keep the plants fresh without the harm resulting from continual damp foliage. You can keep the walks damp day and night if there is plenty of air in the house.

By the way, don't keep the ventilators half closed while planting unless the wind is very high and a strong draught would strike the plants. Carnations do not need a close, hot atmosphere to recover. They enjoy a cool, airy, bracing atmosphere at all times. So keep up the ventilators all you can. Last week we planted a bed next to a south glass wall from which every third pane of glass had been removed to admit air. These plants never wilted a particle but today are all but one plant out of the whole bed growing nicely. That one plant had stem-rot.

Depth of Soil for Carnations.

I was glad to see those letters from Messrs. Poehlmann and Goddard regarding depth of soil and I hope many others will tell us what they think of it. If there are any who have tried a very shallow depth of soil we should very much like to know what their experience has been. Would especially like to hear from Mr. Witterstaetter regarding that bed of Lawson he had last season. As I said before, I have had no experience with less than three and one-half inches of soil except in accidental small spots, so I cannot speak from actual knowledge, but I shall find out this season. Mr. Poehlmann is right when he says that you cannot bench a plant from a three and one-halt-inch pot in three inches of loose soil; that would never do. But we did plant a lot of Lawson from two and one-half-inch pots in a scant three inches of soil in May, and the plants are growing finely and are larger today than the balance of the lot, which were planted in the field. Our experiments are being made entirely with beds made on cinders, as we have no raised benches for carnations at present. With these beds there is no danger of washing the plant-food away, as there is with raised benches.

VARIETIES TOGETHER.

We have two houses to be planted with carnations this month and would like to know which of the following varieties should be planted in each house. What temperatures should be kept? The varieties are Lawson, Wolcott, Enchantress, Queen Louise, Flora Hill, Estelle, Nelson, Joost and Peru. A. J. K.

I would plant Lawson, Gov. Wolcott, Flora Hill and Queen Louise in one house, giving Lawson the warmest place in the house and Queen Louise the coolest. Plant the other varieties in the other house, giving Enchantress the coolest place and Estelle the warmest place. Run the warmer house 52 to 56 degrees and the cooler house 48 to 52 degrees. Try to plant Lawson and Enchantress where you can shade them handily without shading the others, as they will need a little shade toward spring before the others are ready for it. Gov. Wolcott, Enchantress, Nelson and Peru will need the most headroom. Lawson and Estelle will need the least headroom.

PROPAGATING HOUSE.

I want to build a propagating house for rooting geraniums and all kinds of bedding stock. Would be pleased to have you tell me how wide and high to make it, and every detail to arrange an ideal propagating house, and arrangement for heating, in connection with a house devoted to bedding plants. How would it be to place the bedding plants on solid beds instead of raised benches, and how would you in that case arrange your heating pipes? For starting vegetables and pansy plants, say in January, would you advise low, narrow houses, say ten feet wide, or twenty-seven feet, or wider and higher to the ridge, and how would you arrange your ventilation for such a house? L.

This is a large and important subject and to thoroughly do justice to it would occupy much space, and I will be as brief as the subject will allow. The size of the house will depend on the size of your business, or quantity you want to grow. In many establishments where roses and carnations are largely grown you will find the propagating house to be a lean-to, the south wall eight feet high and the front wall five feet. This house has a northern aspect, with one bench and one path and, with the exception of a few months in summer, no direct sun rays enter the house. Then, again, at large carnation specialists' you will see the propagating house an equal span twenty or more feet wide, with three or four benches. I much prefer the lighter house. If propagating on a large scale I would prefer a house 20x100 feet to one 10x200, but remember you can root a great lot of cuttings in a bed three feet wide and 100 feet long.

There is a period of a week or two after the cuttings are rooted and potted off that it is most essential that about the same conditions should be given the little plants as they had in the sand, viz., a little heat in the sand or ashes that the pots are set on, and this brings us to the subject of the great difference in the requirements of our young plants. While the slightly warm bench will be of the greatest benefit to young roses when first potted from the sand, and also almost all our bedding plants, it would be perfectly superfluous for carnations. Many of our carnation growers don't believe in any bottom heat for rooting them.

Now if I built a special propagating house, it would be difficult to improve in any feature on one the writer operated many years ago, for it was perfect. Let it be any desired length, ten feet six inches wide and the pitch of roof a little less than 45 degrees. The width will give you plenty of path room without walking sideways, and two convenient benches. One bench you can use for propagating and the other for the plants when first potted. Don't build the benches fastened to the posts of the side walls. It rots the posts as well as your benches. Build the benches independent and board them up tight back and front. On the front or path side of your benches let the second board from the top be hinged so that when desired you can raise it and fasten it up so that the heat from the pipes beneath the bench will warm the house. In severe weather this works well, because too much hot pipe would make the sand unduly warm and you need the heat in the house. In moderate weather you would want no heat in the house, but a little in the sand. For the bottoms of both beds we used to use common roofing slate. When firing hard they get too warm and they even rot. Use a tile, not a drain tile, but a solid tile about one and a half inches thick. We bought them last year 18x12 inches.

Now, if you can use tee-iron for supports of these tile, it will be far more lasting than wood. Use four inches of sand on the tile and let the surface of the bed be a good three feet above the level of the path. You don't want to be bending your back while putting in cuttings. Of course the tiles on the bench for potted plants need only an inch or less of sand or ashes.

This size house is easily shaded with cheese cloth suspended with small brass rings and two wires running lengthwise of the house on each side, but that's another story and would take too long to tell, yet very simple. Unrooted cuttings and plants for a few days from the cutting bed want shade when the sun shines, but more shade than is necessary to keep them from wilting is an injury.

If you are using steam you will put that into your propagating house. If water, you will want to continue, but if you have neither and are starting, then by all means use hot water for such a house as I have described. Run two 2-inch flows and two 2-inch returns under each bench and you will need no heating pipes above the benches. Don't, for heaven's sake, listen to that fallacy about running a 2-inch or 3-inch pipe along under the ridge pole, branching at the farther end and returning under the benches. Don't do it. Far better to spend $100 extra in getting your heater six feet below the level of the greenhouse floor. Steam heat is controlled by valves; it is steam or nothing. Hot water is controlled by the furnace door and damper.

The ventilation of this house, if it runs north and south, which is the better plan, should be continuous and open at the ridge. It is far better, for cuttings especially, to have one inch of continuous ventilation than three inches in some places and none in others.

About solid beds. Much as there is to recommend low, well drained beds for roses and carnations or anything that is planted out, don't think of them for geraniums or our ordinary run of bedding plants.

Now, Mr. Editor, I am egotist enough to believe I have described an ideal propagating house, yet if a man is a gardener he can propagate a whole lot of things, roses, carnations and chrysanthemums, on any ordinary bench, for instance, a side bench in a carnation house. Yet for many things it's a comfort to have a regular propagating house.

HAIL AT SAGINAW.

The accompanying illustration shows the effect of the hail which struck the establishment of John B. Goetz, at Saginaw, Mich., July 22. The photograph shows about one-third of the glass area, which is about 32,000 square feet. The entire place was riddled.

The Roethke Floral Co., not far away, had sixteen houses in which practically all the glass was broken. At both places new houses were added this spring, the past season having been a most prosperous one. The loss is not alone in glass, but the young stock was very badly cut to pieces.

The Florists' Hail Association has had many heavy losses to pay this season and has been of prime importance in putting many growers back on their feet, but in this case no assistance will come from that quarter, neither Mr. Goetz nor the Roethke Co. being a member.

The establishment of Chas. Frueh & Sons and others on the east side escaped unscathed.

THE ORIENTAL POPPY.

The poppies are classed among the most popular of garden flowers. The oriental poppy is the longest lived of the genus and has the largest and most striking flowers. C. S. Harrison, of York, Neb., says it has been known to bloom for twenty-five years in succession. The plant is from two to four feet in height and the flowers are often six or seven inches across. The color was originally scarlet, with a black spot, but since the late eighties a considerable variation in color has been obtained by crossings and the color now shades from red to salmon and pale pink. The black spot on each petal has in some cases given way to delicate pencilings and some are unmarked. The plant has a root like a small parsnip, which increases to a heavy stool. It is easily propagated by division or by seed. T. D. Hatfield, of Wellesley, Mass., says that the dividing should be done after blooming, in late July or August, as they will then start and make good growth before freezing weather, flowering well the next season. Mr. Harrison says they should be planted in groups of not less than a dozen, as the individual flowers last but a few days; however, new ones come on and keep up a succession for several weeks.

MAKING A HOTBED.

Will you kindly inform me as to the manner and time, also the sort of manure and depth, for making a hotbed for cabbage plants for early spring.

M. F. O'C.

The beginning of March is about the best time to make a hotbed for the raising of cabbage plants and similar subjects for spring. It is not advisable to do it much before this, as if the weather was very severe the bed would hardly maintain sufficient heat to carry your plants through. Previous to making up the bed the material should be gotten together, thoroughly mixed and moistened if dry to insure an even heat. The best material is a mixture of stable litter and leaves. This will give a less violent but more lasting heat than if stable litter alone is used.

The soil in the frame should be excavated to a depth of about four feet. This space should be filled up with the material, which should be firmly packed. In filling have the material high enough to allow for settling; it will probably settle six or eight inches after it gets thoroughly heated. The sashes should be placed over the frame to keep off snow and rains but vented a little top and bottom to allow the steam to escape. After a few days a covering of about two inches of soil should be placed evenly over the heating material to help concentrate the heat.

It will be too warm to place the seeds in it at first, but a thermometer should be placed in the frame and after the bottom heat has receded to about 70 degrees, which will probably be in about eight or ten days, the seeds may safely be sown. The upper temperature can be regulated by air if the weather is mild and by covering over the sash if the weather is severe. A night temperature of about 65 degrees will be high enough after the seeds are started; higher than this would make them drawn and weakly.

I prefer to sow the seeds in flats, using a rather free but not over rich soil. In these they are easier to handle when it comes to the pricking over stage, as the flats can be removed to some building where the pricking over can be done into other flats much easier and with less expense than if they had to be pricked over into the frame during the prevalence of cold, cutting weather.

COPYRIGHT IN NOVELTIES.

The French Society of Rose Growers has once again started the question of protection for raisers of novelties. This is a matter that has often been discussed without any practical result, some of those most concerned having expressed opposite opinions. The raiser has, to a large extent, control over his own destinies, and if he does not exercise it he has no one to blame but himself. Happily for the world at large, if not for the individual, it is not every one who has the commercial instinct. At the same time every one likes to see merit adequately rewarded, and dislikes to see others reap the advantage they have not earned.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

INSECT PESTS.

The grower has need to be endowed with more than the average amount of patience, for no sooner does he have the promise of obtaining an exceptionally good crop than some insect pest puts in an appearance and makes a strenuous effort to share it with him. The matter of sharing would not, perhaps, be of great consequence, were it not that the pest requires the greater part, and in its endeavors to obtain it completely ruins the crop unless kept in subjection.

With a full knowledge of the difficulty of dealing promptly with insect attacks, we feel it our duty to point out that however difficult it may be, in the first instance, to adopt repressive measures, the difficulty in dealing with insect pests is increased a hundred fold when they are allowed to become established before anything is done to check them. The golden rule in all cases is, immediately insect pests make their appearance, to take steps for their eradication. To be in a position to take full advantage of this rule close observation is necessary, and it is not less essential to be provided with a stock of the several preparations known to be the most effectual in insect destruction. There should, for instance, be on hand a liberal supply of such things as soft soap, quassia and some form of nicotine ready for use. For the application of insecticides a spraying machine is most economical and efficient. There should also be at command a liberal supply of soot and lime for the prevention of attacks of snails and slugs, which this season are very plentiful and most destructive to vegetable crops in their earlier stages of development. It should be remembered in this connection that in keeping pests of all kinds in subjection, not only are the present crops saved, but subsequent ones are less likely to suffer damage.—Gardeners' Magazine.

The Market.

The week has brought very little change with regard to the staple stock in the market. Roses from old plants have almost disappeared and the receipts of young stock show very little increase. There is still an active demand for the better grade of goods and all clean roses are bringing comparatively good prices. Carnations are scarce. The benches have practically all been cleared and the outdoor stock is not much in evidence as yet. What few blooms come in are very poor. The receipts of asters have shown the anticipated increase and there are now large quantities in all wholesale houses. The quality in general is not very good and prices are low in consequence. What good stock there is brings fair money. Receipts of sweet peas are again on the increase, but there is fair sale of this item at moderate prices, as there is very little else which can be used in wedding work. The supplies of auratum lilies have increased and sales are

Chicago to St. Louis.

There was a well attended special meeting of the Florists' Club last Thursday evening to discuss the trip to St. Louis. It was decided to start Monday, August 15, at about 11 a. m. The exact hour cannot be set until it is known how many will go; 100 will call for a special train. Everyone who is going should notify P. J. Hauswirth, chairman of committee, 227 Michigan avenue, by postal card or telephone. This is important.

Mr. Hauswirth was at St. Louis Saturday and looked into hotel arrangements. There will be plenty of room. The committee recommended that those going reserve accommodations at any of the following:

Hotel St. Nicholas, Eighth and Locust streets, $2 per day and up, two in a room.

Hotel Rozier, opposite the convention hall, $1.50 per day and up, two in a room.

National Hotel, close to hall, $1 a bed, two or more beds in a room.

In private houses, by addressing F. M. Ellis, 1316 Pine street, who will make all arrangements on request.

street, is adding one house to his establishment.

The city employes of the Geo. Wittbold Company picnicked at the Edgebrook establishment last Saturday. Both city stores were closed for the day.

John P. Risch has returned from a two weeks' vacation spent in Wisconsin.

J. A. Budlong will have 60,000 carnation plants benched by the end of this week.

Peter Reinberg's planting of carnations will not be as heavy this year as last, more room being given to roses.

Various Notes.

John Lang, who has for many years been in business at Robey and Melrose streets, has sold his stock and leased his greenhouses for five years to Peter Reinberger. Mr. Lang has accumulated a modest competence since he has been in business at this stand and will go to Europe in a week or two for a protracted visit. Mr. Reinberger has been in business in leased houses for several years and is well liked. His new place consists of seven houses, largely in bedding stock, chrysanthemums and carnations.

There was considerable hail southwest of town last Wednesday. About 300 lights of glass were broken in the greenhouses of Mount Greenwood cemetery and bedding plants were badly cut to pieces. West of there the hail was much heavier and the market gardeners lost practically all their stock.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

Except for an occasional funeral design, business is almost at a standstill. We are probably not as slack as our nearby city, Fall River, with its cotton mills' strike. Our mills here are running on short time, but that is better than having them closed up all together.

The Florists' Club held its first outing at Sylvan Grove July 22 and had a first-class time. Lester Mann, of Mann Bros., of Randolph, and Wm. Anderson, of Anderson & Williams, of Waltham, were guests of the club. After partaking of a first-class clam bake with all the "fixins," there was the baseball game between the greenhouse and store teams. The hardest task was to find an umpire. We tried to get "Bill" Anderson to officiate, but he said that he had promised Mrs. Anderson that he would come home safe and sound and would not take any chances. Covill and Gifford were the batteries for the store team and Bly and Flynn for the greenhouse men. The store men won the game in ten innings, with a score of 16 to 15, Wm. C. Peirce making a fine two base hit with a man on second base, winning the game. Both pitchers pitched a fine game, Covill striking out twelve men. Special features of the game were a fine catch of a fly ball by Borden, of the store team, in the first half of the tenth inning, with three men on bases, and the kicking of Bly, of the greenhouse team.

The second annual fall exhibition of the New Bedford Horticultural Society will be held September 15 to 17. It is expected that there will be the finest display of dahlias ever exhibited in southeastern Massachusetts. Henry C. Denison has donated two silver cups for dahlias, one for the open class for sixty varieties and one for the amateur class for thirty varieties, and great interest is shown.

The Market.

Supplies have been comparatively light during the past week, and stock has generally cleared out well. Particularly was this the case on July 30, when no flowers remained in the market. Roses are not plentiful. Best Beauties bring $2 per dozen. Anderson and Christensen are sending in some nice stock of these. Asters are more abundant but have sold well, especially whites, which have been in short supply at 75 cents to $1 per 100. Sweet peas are becoming poor and spotted and will not now cut much figure. Lily of the valley sells well at from $4 to $6 per 100. Gladioli are in good supply at $3 to $8 per 100, white shades bringing the higher price. White flowers of all sorts have been decidedly scarce during the past week.

Indoor carnations are now wretchedly small and will soon be a thing of the past. Some good outdoor-grown flowers are now coming in, however. The best bring $2 per 100. The Queen, white, and Saxon, scarlet, seem to take the lead.

Weekly Exhibition.

Although there was only one competitive class for cut flowers at Horticultural Hall on July 30 the lecture hall was completely filled with exhibits. For thirty varieties of hardy herbaceous perennials there were four fine collections staged and competition was close. Eventually the prizes went to Carl Blomberg, Walter Hunnewell, T. D. Hatfield, gardener, and Bay State Nurseries, W. H. Wyman, proprietor. Robert Cameron again staged, but not for competition, a very extensive collection of perennials. Blue Hill Nurseries showed a grand collection of herbaceous phlox in fifty varieties, also some fine seedlings. A few of the best sorts noted were Blue Hill, Le Mahdi, Evenement, Coquelicot, General Chanzy, Lununeux, Esperance, La Candeur, Le Cygne, Amphitryon, Cameron and Lord Rayleigh. He also exhibited the apricot colored Lilium Batmanniæ.

Peter Cairns had a nice collection of hollyhocks. Mrs. L. Towle, a table of fine sweet peas and dahlias, the latter the first of the season. W. Whitman had a large display of perennials and annuals, as had Mrs. E. M. Gill. L. H. Atkins had a display made interesting from the fact that it was from a congested city yard, where conditions were of the worst, cats being classed as about the greatest stumbling block in the way of success. The display included Shirley poppies, hollyhocks and a general assortment of biennials and annuals, a fine illustration of what may be accomplished under adverse conditions.

Vegetables again were finely shown and the fruit exhibits included the first outdoor grown apricots, peaches, apples and pears of the season. As usual the Boston Mycological Club had a fine collection of fungi.

Various Notes.

J. F. Free, better known as "Joe," of the Columbus avenue market, was married on July 26 to Miss Welch, of Charlestown. The boys in the market remembered Joe with a purse of gold, and his many friends there and elsewhere wish him much joy.

William H. Elliott is sending some very fine Kaiserin roses to the market. These sell on sight.

The white gladioli from W. W. Edgar are bringing top notch prices.

Alexander Montgomery is sending in first-class valley from the Waban Rose Conservatories and has the market largely to himself at present.

At the Taunton greenhouse, Willard & Williams continue to make improvements in their plant and report a steadily increasing trade. They have 8,000 chrysanthemums benched and are just preparing to house an equal number of carnations. Stock in the field looks first class. We noted a long bench of Nephrolepis Piersoni in fine condition. Mr. Willard says this is a capital seller. Here, as elsewhere, benched plants show a tendency to revert to the type.

At W. J. Clemson's estate in Taunton, Oscar Kristenson had his herbaceous perennial borders in fine condition. Sweet peas were here eight feet high and loaded with bloom. In hardy climbing roses, Lady Gay, Farquhar and Crimson Rambler were the most attractive. In one of the greenhouses single stem chrysanthemums looked well.

William C. Winter, of Mansfield, is one of the oldest and most successful florists near Boston. He has been located in Mansfield for forty years, and has a nice, compact plant of 12,000 feet. A house of grapes 24x103 containing Black Hamburg and Muscat of Alexandria had been heavily cut from, but what remained were large, finely finished bunches. Mr. Winter, however, states that the demand for even such fine grapes as he raises is very uncertain and prices not at all remunerative. One house which had contained grapes was planted to other stock. Mr. Winter sells most of his fruit in New York. If such fruit as he has this season is hard to sell, the outlook for commercial fruit growing would seem to be anything but roseate. Cucumbers are grown to a considerable extent here. Present prices of 75 cents per bushel, compared with $2.50 a year ago, are not very encouraging.

Mansfield is becoming a famous cucumber center. Half a dozen establishments of large size are now located there and one or two new ones are under way. Fruit is shipped to New York and Boston, chiefly to the former city.

Everywhere one goes indications are to be seen of the increasing popularity of the dahlia in this section. The cactus varieties are the most popular. Wm. C. Winter grows a large stock of all the best varieties and does a heavy spring trade in them. He finds much better profits in these than in other branches of his profession.

The E. S. Converse estate in Malden is well known to Boston horticulturists. D. F. Roy has been superintendent here for sixteen years. He is a frequent and successful exhibitor in New York and Boston and usually has something good to show visitors. Specimen chrysanthemum plants at present look splendid and will be hard to beat at Horticultural Hall next November. Pompons, anemones and singles are given special attention here. Single stems were very vigorous. Stove and greenhouse plants in variety, cyclamens, roses and other stock looked well. A new house was being built for carnations and melons. Several divisions are alloted to fruit, about 150 feet run being given to grapes.

Mr. Roy has recently been appointed superintendent of Pine Bank park, Malden, a picturesque spot of 100 acres, and cares for this in addition to the Converse estate. He at present has a tremendous task before him in fighting the gypsy moth, which is here at present in countless millions. We noted scores of magnificent white pines without a needle.

having been eaten for two successive years. These are now dead. Deciduous trees of all kinds are eaten bare in some parts. A big fight will be put up to keep them in check, but the task seems a tremendous one for local authorities to tackle. Stretches of woodland in other parts of Malden and Medford were as bare as though a forest fire had swept them.

At General Samuel C. Lawrence's large estate in Medford are probably the finest specimens of hydrangea to be found in this state. Plants nine feet high and as much across covered with bloom, are dotted about the lawns. A finely constructed and roomy pit is used as a storehouse for these in winter. Standard lantanas and Hibiscus Rosa-Sinensis were used to good effect in the flower beds. A large house of finely grown chrysanthemums in pots and a capital lot of single stem plants were noted. A house of crotons showed excellent culture, as did a batch of dipladenias, which included some very desirable seedlings. Cinerarias were already in 8-inch pots and may need tubs ere spring. Carnations are popular and William Keith, the able and respected superintendent, showed us numerous seedlings in various stages. It has cost General Lawrence many thousands of dollars to fight the gypsy moth on his estate, and but for his efforts the destruction in Medford would be far more widespread than it is.

Indications at this date do not point to a large delegation to the St. Louis convention.

August 6 will be perennial phlox day at Horticultural Hall. A fine display is assured.

Superintendent Doogue is preparing a fine display in the Public Gardens for Grand Army encampment week, the third week in August. The last G. A. R. gathering in Boston was in 1890. Carpet bedding was then more popular than at present.

W. N. Craig.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business is very slow just now. Some of the boys report quite a lot of funeral work, but that is about all that is going on at present. The wholesalers report plenty of stock of all kinds, but dealers are buying only in small lots, just to carry them for one day. Most of the stock that comes in is of exceedingly poor quality and especially so with carnations. For these the demand is good, but it is very hard to obtain good stock. Roses are very plentiful, but more are dumped than are sold just now. Asters, too, are a glut; only white are selling. The colored sorts are piled up by the thousands at the commission houses. Gladioli are also a drug, as in fact is all outdoor stuff. The least said about the cut flower market at this time the better.

Convention Notes.

The members of the Florists' Club should not forget the meeting next Thursday afternoon, August 11. This is the most important meeting of the year. At this meeting all the committee badges will be given the members, also the souvenir book. It will be necessary for each member to have a badge in order to partake in the entertainment and proceedings of the convention. It has been decided that no badge or book will be sent to any of the local club members by mail. The meeting will open promptly at 2 o'clock, as officers are to be elected and more than the usual amount of business transacted, as only four days are left before the opening of the S. A. F. convention.

President Breitmeyer, of Detroit, and P. J. Hauswirth, of Chicago, spent Saturday and Sunday in St. Louis. On Saturday morning they visited the convention and exhibition halls, where a big force of carpenters was at work erecting tables and benches for the exhibitors, which very much pleased the president. In the afternoon both gentlemen visited the World's Fair. Sunday was taken up with inspection of hotels and the bowling alleys. At the latter place, a meeting of the bowling and shooting committees was held, after which both left for home, satisfied that great things are in store for the delegates and the convention will be a great success.

Mr. Kern, the proprietor of the Palace alleys, where the convention bowling contest will take place, says he will put the twelve alleys in fine shape. The large sitting room in the front of the alleys will be handsomely decorated for the occasion. There is plenty of room for all visitors to view the contest. As was decided at Milwaukee, the contest will be governed by the rules of the American Bowling Congress, of which Samuel Knopf, of Dayton, O., is secretary, who will be here in person during the bowling. The boys can bring their loaded balls this year, but the weight must not be over sixteen and one-half pounds.

Superintendent Kuehn, of the trade display, reports that he has a surprise in store for the S. A. F. members in the turtle exhibit, in which 1,500 turtles will take part. Don't fail to see it, as you are entitled to one to take home as a souvenir.

The hotel committee, in charge of Frank Ellis, has prepared a list of all the prominent hotels and private rooms for those who have not made arrangements ahead. These will be presented to the delegates as they arrive at the station. Those who wish to be close to the convention hall should arrange with the Hotel Rozier, across the way from the hall; the Hotel Jefferson, one block away; the International, 1312 Washington avenue, a block from the hall, or the Merchants, at Twelfth and Olive streets. There are plenty of good accommodations for everybody at reasonable rates.

Sergeant at Arms Pilcher is now in training at Kirkwood for his duties during the convention. The members will find in Mr. Pilcher a very large and powerful man, very polite and agreeable to all, but not very easy to handle.

State Vice-president Juengel has proved himself a hustler for the S. A. F. He has rounded up a lot of new members for the society. He reports that he will have another batch of names by the next meeting of the local club next Thursday.

The local sport committee met on Sunday afternoon at the Palace Bowling Alleys, with President Breitmeyer of the S. A. F. and the next president (so far as St. Louis is concerned), Phil. J. Hauswirth, of Chicago. This meeting was held for the purpose of arranging for the prizes for the bowling and shooting during the convention. Everything was satisfactorily arranged in short order and President Breitmeyer is more than pleased with all arrangements and the harmonious way our boys are working, and he could see nothing but good times before the members when they come to spend a week in St. Louis. Mr. Breitmeyer especially spoke well of the hotel committee in the way they are handling the work, an office having been fitted up at the convention hall where 5,000 visitors can be accommodated with rooms in any part of the city and at any price, with guides in waiting to take them to these rooms or hotels.

Those who attended the meeting of the local committee were: Carl Beyer, F. C. Weber, C. A. Kuehn, F. H. Meinhardt, Otto G. Koenig, Charles Juengel, Theo. Miller, F. M. Ellis, A. Y. Ellison and J. J. Beneke. After the meeting a few games were bowled, in which President Breitmeyer and Phil Hauswirth made some great scores.

Nearly a hundred cases of display goods have arrived at the convention hall in care of Superintendent Kuehn. Everything will be in readiness by the end of the week in the exhibition hall for the exhibitors to place their goods.

Visitors: H. Currie, of Currie Bros., Milwaukee, Wis., and Wm. F. Zane and son, of Wheeling, W. Va.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

The week opened with floods of rain and floods of gladioli and asters. The best stock brings a fairly good price in small quantities, but the buyer who can use large lots can make his own prices. I saw 3,000 offered for $10. The regular rate is 50 cents per 100 and this will be the prevailing figure for weeks to come. Occasionally 2 cents and even 3 cents has been asked for selected stock and colors of the new varieties. Good asters seem to be in fair demand at encouraging prices, but ordinary stock is not wanted and cannot be disposed of.

The new roses are arriving in larger quantities daily, but in most cases quality is sadly lacking. The best Beauties and Brides command even better rates than the quoted prices, and none are left unsold. Dahlias have only just arrived and go freely. Sweet peas are about out of the running. Business is exceedingly dull and no indications of a revival are yet in evidence. Another month will see the clouds dissipated and the premonitory evidences of a return to life.

Various Notes.

B. Suzuki, of Suzuki & Iida, arrived safely at Yokohama and Chas. Loechner, of the same house, has returned from his European trip, which he has devoted the last three months to his firm's interests. Messrs. Suzuki & Iida are introducing Japanese grown freesias, finding a good demand for them.

The convention is so near that it becomes a more interesting topic daily. The New York delegation, it is hoped, will be worthy of the city. A lesser number than fifty would hardly be creditable to the greatest floricultural center in the world. It is hard to understand, with the added attraction of the World's Fair, how anyone with the time and reasonable cost to spare, can afford to stay away. St. Louis has had ideal temperature this year. Every preparation has been made for the comfort of the florists while there, and I predict the greatest meeting the society has ever enjoyed.

As to 1905, the east is entitled to favor, as the south and west and north have been remembered since 1901. This seems to be the era of the young man and it is rumored that this year another young Lochinvar will come out of the west, a young man of universal popularity, whose executive ability is conceded and whose devotion to the enjoyment of the members of the S. A. F. at the annual gatherings has been constant.

The New Yorkers will leave for St. Louis on Sunday, August 14, at 10 a. m., from the Liberty street station of the Baltimore & Ohio, arriving in the Fair city at 6 o'clock on Monday evening. Mr. O'Mara is chairman of the transportation committee and all who intend to go should notify him at once so that complete arrangements for their comfort may be made. From present indications the bowling team will include Messrs. Lang, Traendly, O'Mara, Siebrecht and Guttman, a good team with a capable average of 150, if the nerve supply does not become exhausted.

A. J. Fellouris, the green goods man, is visiting his customers as far west as Chicago and will end his trip among his growers and shippers in North Carolina and Virginia.

Last Monday, at the Church of the Sacred Heart, Bay Shore, Miss Ida Millang was married to William Kelley, of Long Island City. The young lady has been associated with her brother, August, in his retail florists' business and the trade extends hearty good wishes and congratulations. The happy couple are enjoying their honeymoon in the Catskills.

Miss Foran, bookkeeper for the New York Cut Flower Company, leaves for her holidays next week and will rest amid familiar scenes at her old home near Quebec, Canada.

H. H. Berger & Co. report their Harrisii in good shape, as well as oxalis and freesia. Their importations of French stocks are due this week.

John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, will have a grand exhibition of gladioli at the Eden Musee August 15 to 21. The Musee has been the scene of many a floricultural display and this will be made as extensive and popular as any. The exhibition is practically free, as no advance in prices has been made by the management.

F. H. Traendly and Mrs. Traendly will leave for St. Louis a week in advance of the New York contingent and devote some days to sight-seeing at the Fair.

Mrs. Weigert, wife of M. Weigert, of 709 Ninth avenue, died on Thursday of last week after an operation for appendicitis. The deceased had several relatives connected with the florists' business in New York and many handsome designs in flowers were sent to the funeral.

Jas. McManus reports a steady daily demand for orchids and is handling at present sixteen popular varieties, some especially fine sprays of Oncidium varicosum among them, commanding top figures. Prices range from 15 cents to 75 cents.

Frank Good, with Jos. Fenrich, has returned from Boston, where he attended the funeral of his mother on Thursday. His friends extend their sympathy.

Very many of the florists this season have adopted the commendable and sensible plan of locating at resorts within easy distance of New York, coming in daily to the demands of business and breathing the ozone of the mountains or reveling in the enjoyments of surf bathing in the afternoons and evenings.

John J. Gunther and family are at Rockaway and W. J. Gunther and family find Seagirt, N. J., convenient and healthful, with Barnegat in hailing distance.

Alex. Guttman and family are back from a month's holiday in Freeport. On his return from the St. Louis convention he will build an extension to his store, largely increasing his shipping facilities.

Phil. Ditzenberger, of Ghormley's, and wife have returned from a two weeks' visit to Palm Beach, Fla., where an average of 100 degrees in the shade temperature makes New York seem as cool as the promised land.

Wm. Ghormley was in the city on Saturday, the first time since his serious and prolonged illness. He is now convalescing rapidly and will be ready for the usual strenuous labors of the fall. This house is handling some superb asters and there are fine Liberties and Beauties from "up state" this week at Young & Nugent's.

S. S. Butterfield, vice-president of the New York Florists' Club, is enjoying his two weeks' recuperation at his old home in Jamestown, N. Y.

Miss Anna Chapman, bookkeeper for A. H. Langjahr, at Twenty-eighth street, will leave on Saturday for her yearly holiday at Ocean Grove, N. J., where she will take part in the great musical festival.

Mr. O'Mara is anxious that all who intend to go to the St. Louis convention with the New York delegation notify him at once, as any further delay will make proper arrangements for the comfort of the company difficult.

Ashland, O.—R. H. Gwinner, the attorney, has established a business growing vegetable plants and is working into plants and cut flowers.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. W. Kirkpatrick, McKinney, Tex.; Vice-Pres., C. L. Watrous, Des Moines; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 29th annual convention will be held at West Baden, Ind., June, 1905.

NURSERIES in western New York are finding this a much better growing season than that of 1903.

W. F. HEIKES is spending the summer at St. Louis and is one of the judges on fruits at the exposition.

THE Chicago Tree Planting Society proposes to hold a conference in the autumn on the subject of tree planting in the city.

THE Aurora Nursery Co., Aurora, Ill., will shortly put up a good sized range of greenhouses. John Brick is propagator there.

THE Forest Nursery and Seed Company, Irving College, Tenn., is successor to J. H. H. Boyd, of Gage, and Perry Bros., of Irving College.

THE nurseryman who doesn't grow peonies is omitting a profitable item. The best sorts are no more expensive to grow than common stuff.

A NEW enterprise is the Millsdale Nursery, of Greenville, S. C. The capital is $5,000 and the officers are C. H. Croskeys, president; M. L. Berry, vice-president, and J. N. Holland, secretary.

ONE of the best trees for city use is the rapid-growing ailanthus, or tree of heaven, although there are those who say its flowers smell like the other place. However, the odor of the bloom on the seed bearing form is not offensive and it thrives in poor soils and under conditions which few trees will endure.

LE GRANDE, ORE.—C. Plant, of the Le Grande Nurseries, has a new and distinct variety of box elder which from its color he calls the blue box elder. It grows rapidly, very straight and the bark, which is very smooth, is a decided blue. The leaves are very large. The variety, growing near the ordinary type, never fails to attract the attention of visitors.

THRIPS ON SMILAX.

We are troubled to death with a little black bug which destroys our smilax. Will someone kindly tell us what it is and how to get rid of it? S. F. C.

The little black bug referred to in this query is probably thrips, an insect that is capable of doing great damage to a smilax bed in a very short time unless measures are taken for its extermination, and one that spreads very rapidly during warm weather. The most effective remedy for this insect is found in the fumes of nicotine, this being applied either by vaporizing some one of the nicotine solutions in the house in question, or by fumigating with Aphis Punk, the latter being the easiest and most convenient method of applying the nicotine. Thrips may be overcome by several fumigations with tobacco stems or snuff, but strong tobacco smoke is likely to scorch the tender tips of the smilax, whereas the Aphis Punk is not liable to harm the plants. I would use six rolls of the punk to a house 20x100 feet and repeat the dose two or three times on successive evenings if the weather was favorable. Such a quantity of this preparation will not harm Boston ferns, so it is not probable that it will do any injury to the smilax. The first application of the punk will cause a number of the insects to drop to the ground, and unless they are followed up with successive doses they will soon crawl up and resume business at the old stand.

W. H. TAPLIN.

THE YOUNGEST FLORIST.

We desire to ask a question through the REVIEW: What is the age of the youngest florist in the craft? We refer to those owning and managing a business, not to employes.

H. & C.

Perhaps some reader may be able to give light on this point but there are so many young men engaged in the business that it is impossible to state without fear of contradiction who is the youngest; indeed, the youngest today might not be the youngest tomorrow for, despite the cry so often raised that our trade is not attractive to those just embarking on the sea of business, yet ours is rapidly becoming a young man's craft. Competition is becoming as keen in our line as in any other, with the result that the successful ones are required to lead what would be called a strenuous life in comparison to that of many a successful florist of even a decade ago. However we regret their passing, and we shall never cease to revere the many grand old men of our profession, still it is to the young men we look to do the hustling.

While it is not intended to cite the following as the youngest men in the trade, still the conspicuous successes which they have achieved warrants note of Leo Niessen, of Philadelphia, as an example of the young man in the commission business and of the Wittbolds, in Chicago, combining plant growing, wholesaling and retailing. It is true that the latter, the brothers all young men, built on the foundation which their father was years in laying and still have the benefit of the advice of that fine old plantsman, but the results of their youthful enthusiasm have been none the less apparent for all that. Ages are like white folks according to the darkie, "mighty onsartin," but we know of no younger wholesale cut flower dealer than Mr. Niessen, not yet 27, certainly there is no one of his years who has been so long handling cut flowers on commission, for he began in a small way in 1895, and few who have been more steadily successful. Peter Weiland, of New Castle and Cincinnati, just turned 27, has 100,000 feet of glass and is well pleased with his start in the wholesale way.

We shall be pleased to hear of other young men of the trade.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Asters, carnations and valley are the principal cut flowers of the week, outside of roses. There are a good many sales of these flowers, chiefly in small lots. None of them are really plentiful. This is particularly true of valley, which is scarce at times. Carnations have been re-enforced by Mrs. Fisher from the field, very short in stem, as a rule, but very welcome. Gladioli are plentiful but they are not easy to sell in any quantity. It is getting too hot for sweet peas.

The Florists' Club.

David Rust presided over a well attended meeting of the Florists' Club on Tuesday evening. The Conard & Jones Co., West Grove, Pa., showed seven varieties of improved cannas, and Antoine Wintzer, who has made a special study of canna hybridization for the past decade, gave an interesting address on what has been accomplished, showing that America is outstripping France in this work. John A. Shellem exhibited four vases of beautiful hardy phlox.

After a lively debate the club reversed its action of last May and decided to put a representative bowling team in the field at St. Louis. A new series of games will be started at once.

The committee on transportation has arranged that the members take the 8:25 p. m. train from Broad street station on Sunday, August 14, reaching St. Louis at 9:40 p. m. Monday. The excursion ticket costs $24.75, sleeping car berths extra. Refreshments will be served in the train under the supervision of John Westcott. You know what that means. Members who have not already sent in their names to President John Westcott, Ridge and Lehigh avenues, should do so at once to enable the committee to arrange for all who are going.

Flower Market.

The following notice has been sent out:

To the stockholders of the Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Market: By the authority vested in me by the constitution and by-laws of the Philadelphia Wholesale Flower Market, I deem it my duty to call a special meeting of the stockholders of above company for Friday, August 12, 1904, at 2 p. m., to take action concerning the future of the Flower Market and consider the advisability of changing quarters, as we have an opportunity of disposing of our lease, which does not expire until July, 1906.

WM. K. HARRIS, President.

This meeting is important and every stockholder is urged to be present.

A Visitor.

Last Saturday Arthur Cowee, of Meadowvale Farm, Berlin, N. Y., visited Philadelphia. Mr. Cowee has made a specialty of gladioli. Some of his figures show what wonderful progress he has made with his specialty. This year he has 100 acres planted in gladioli and expects to increase last year's harvest of 10,000 bushels of bulbs to 16,000 bushels. He is now cutting from his early planted bulbs. When in full crop 40,000 spikes of flowers daily will, he thinks, be a fair estimate of the cut. Mr. Cowee has a large number of gladioli planted out at the St. Louis Fair. This planting furnishes the flowers for a show table, which is kept in good condition by replacing the faded flowers with fresh ones.

Various Notes.

Godfrey Aschmann is rebuilding two greenhouses on his place at 1012 Ontario street.

The Henry F. Michell Co. are greatly pleased with the high quality of their Lilium Harrisii now arriving. The bulbs are plump, sound and of the deep rich yellow color so dear to the heart of the expert bulb grower. Of 100 cases received in one shipment, eighty-eight went out the next day.

Herbert G. Tull, of the firm of Henry A. Dreer, is spending his vacation at his boyhood's home in North Carolina.

W. J. Sherry, with Johnson & Stokes, is spending ten days of his vacation among the seed growers near Toronto, Canada.

Henry C. Geiger, of the Floral Exchange, is at Mt. Pocono.

Frank S. Jackson, manager of the Thornhedge Greenhouses, has a fine lot of Adiantum Farleyense.

Carl Jurgens, of Newport, R. I., continues sending good shipments of fine Kaiserins and Beauties to Leo Niessen. Over one-third of the latter have stems of thirty inches in length.

Charles E. Meehan has just brought his family home from Ocean City, N. J.

Fred J. Michell is going to the St. Louis convention.

Samuel S. Pennock paid a flying visit to Westerly, R. I., home of the carnation, this week.

Rural Notes.

The boss was away and the truck patch hot, so Phil McLean and Willie Knox went to the phone. Phil called up his girl at the store and introduced Willie to her and then to her sister, and they all agreed to get "I scream" that evening. The boys were for soda. They knew it was less expensive and said it was more refined, but the girls wouldn't agree. A pretty girl does look prettier sucking soda through a straw than licking "I scream" off a paper.

Willie Robinson got another job and lost it same day. It was so hot pulling weeds in the rose house that he told the boss he felt sick and wanted to go to the doctor. The boss looked thoughtfully at the little bottle of earth worms that was bulging out of Willie's pocket and said to go by way of the creek and not to hurry. PHIL.

SHIPPING HOLLY.

Will some one who has had experience in shipping holly kindly illuminate our darkness? Holly grows extremely well in the neighborhood of Victoria, B. C. Every Christmas large quantities are shipped to San Francisco and other Pacific coast points. The holly is packed in barrels and covered with an old sack tacked on. We pack twenty-five to thirty pounds in a barrel, according to the amount of berries. Last Christmas we had an unpleasant experience. Of four barrels cut from the same tree, on the same day, two had lost every leaf on arrival at San Francisco. The journey takes about three days by steamer. In another shipment of nine barrels two more were spoiled from the same cause. The consignee wrote us that "fully half the holly arriving in San Francisco last Christmas was a total loss." Of four barrels sent to Seattle, only six hours by boat, two also were spoiled. This is the first mishap we have had in four years and we are completely puzzled. Most of the holly was cut and packed wet, but this should not have any effect on the leaves, as it is generally raining about that time and we always have to cut and ship in that state. We always ship as soon as possible after cutting. We have taken the matter up with the steamship companies but they can throw no light on the subject, neither can the consignees. Any suggestions will be thankfully received.

E. A. Wallace.

COAST CONDITIONS.

I have during the past month met a half dozen gardeners, recent arrivals from various eastern states, who were thinking of locating in the neighborhood of San Francisco, in the business of raising cut flowers for market. In my conversations with them I found them generally men with many years' experience in growing and, as I am often asked for an opinion as to the prospects of building up a lucrative trade here, I think a few words as to how we are situated may be of interest.

The season just ended showed more than ever that we have a much greater demand for fancy stock of almost all kinds than we are producing. New houses and new soil have a marked habit of well satisfying the grower, both as to quantity and quality, but after the third year it is a much more difficult proposition to cut the same quantity of fancy stock, even with far more attention to detail, and it is a fact that many growers do not bring into market the goods that at one time gave them the reputation of handling only first-class stock. Nature has been so lavish with her natural gifts to Californians that the ordinary flower grower in time gets careless and he spends too little of his time in reglazing, whitewashing and fumigating and too much in kicking about the prices his products bring.

Growers do not specialize enough. I have met many during my years of experience and observation who seemed to have a peculiar ability to handle certain kinds of stock. Whether it was that their houses or their situations were particularly suited to that special kind of rose or carnation, or whether the grower had the knack of handling the article right, it is not always possible to tell; generally it is a happy combination of all three conditions, I suppose. I have known many growers who come under this head, who, not being satisfied with a handsome return for their outlay of time and trouble, have branched out into a general line of greenhouse stock, with the result that they passed over to the list of "has beens."

I think a good test of a grower's ability is to give him a couple of houses of Beauties to handle for a couple of years. I have noticed that the man who is successful with this queen of roses can generally be relied on to handle almost anything else. Eternal vigilance is necessary, even in this land of sunshine, to grow paying crops, and many a grower who started in with a half dozen houses of roses finally drifted into carnations and other easier handled stock. But fancy stock, even at this time of the year, is in good demand at fair prices, with little of it to be had considering the acreage of glass hereabouts. Good roses are scarce and I am afraid they always will be. Fancy carnations are never over-plentiful and there is a greater market now than ever.

Orchid growing is still in its infancy here and offers a rich field to the successful man. With outdoor hardy stock the Chinese and Japs have largely monopolized it, except the violet, and that is a money maker under the right conditions. With ferns, asparagus and other green stuff, I think we are well supplied; many houses that originally were devoted to more difficult stock have been filled up with ferns, palms and general house plants, all of which are fair paying crops.

I have met many eastern growers who have come to California during the past few years, men well up in the profession in their own localities, who made a dismal failure here. There is usually but one reason for it. It is because our conditions are so different from those anywhere else that the grower, no matter how well he may be acquainted with his business, makes a flat failure when in business for himself.

My advice to eastern greenhouse men who intend to settle in California and raise cut flowers for market is to serve a year at least in some of our large commercial places so as to get "on to the ropes." I might add in conclusion that we do not have weather here that registers 20 degrees below zero, nor do we grow violets, mignonette or callas under glass, and the grower who is used to these conditions and the growing of these articles will leave all that behind him when he comes to California. G.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Cool weather still stays with us and we are beginning to think we will have no summer before October or November, which are sometimes our warmest months. Flowers of all kinds are plentiful and trade is about the same as it has been for the past few weeks, rather dull. Funeral work comes in very handy at times and an occasional wedding order is not to be despised. Album and rubrum lilies are more plentiful and are good sellers. Kaiserin is the best white rose now and some very good ones are shown. Carnations are in good supply and of good quality. Asters are daily getting more plentiful and are eagerly bought up by the stores, but we have only the smaller flowers offered as yet. Outdoor stock of all kinds is very plentiful and cheap.

During the coal famine of the winter of 1902-03 some factories as well as florists experimented with oil as fuel. No very successful nozzles have as yet been designed to work under low pressure steam or hot water boilers. The best that has been done with Texas oil or crude Pennsylvania oil in the Atlantic coast states has made the cost of heat equivalent to coal at about $20 per ton. L. C. C.

ADVICES from Kentucky are that the blue grass seed crop is one of the largest ever harvested. The crop of the whole blue grass region is usually about 500,000 bushels. Good judges estimate the crop this year at 800,000 to 1,000,000 bushels. The seed is full and heavy, and having been gathered under favorable conditions, is in fine shape for storage.

THE Wm. S. Gilbreath Seed Co. has been incorporated at Indianapolis. The capital stock is $10,000, and the incorporators are Wm. S. Gilbreath, Minnie S. Gilbreath and Wm. P. Herod. The Indiana Seed Warehouse & Storage Co. has also been incorporated with capital stock of $10,000 by Wm. S. Gilbreath, Minnie S. Gilbreath and Paul Fiegel.

THE week's reports from the pea fields of Michigan and Wisconsin are quite discouraging. Rain in some sections has helped the Michigan bean crop, but the outlook is far from satisfactory. Nothing definite has been reported from New York sections. Reports from Canada, however, are about in line with those from Michigan and Wisconsin.

H. SCULTHORP & SONS, of Port Hope, Ont., write: "It is very regretable for us to have to report that the pea crop in this district has suffered much more than we calculated when last writing. All dwarf peas are bedded in weeds and many farmers declare the crop will not pay for harvesting. Medium strawed sorts are badly blighted in sections. Peas on low, heavy soil are a total failure in many sections. The bulk of the earlies are harvested but do not know of any being thrashed. Later sorts are ripening too fast. The season has been too wet for beans. Hay was a heavy crop. Winter wheat will not average over ten bushels per acre; the kernel is small. Barley is a fair crop but badly colored. Oats are looking favorable. Alsike is well filled but there is too much straw, green heads and weeds for good quality seed."

CUSTOMS DECISIONS.

There have been a number of cases before the United States Board of Appraisers recently in which the seedsman making the appeal has lost because of failure to conform to some of the requirements of the law. It is not sufficient, in an appeal from the collector to the Board of Appraisers, to set up that duty was wrongfully assessed, it must be shown under what paragraph of the tariff act the goods in question should come, and this must be supported by evidence. The following is the decision on an appeal brought by W. Atlee, Burpee & Co.:

The merchandise in question consists of pepper, wormwood, celeriac, dandelion, sage, and parsley seeds, all of which were classified under paragraph 254 of the tariff act of 1897, which imposes a duty of thirty per cent ad valorem on "seeds of all kinds, not specially provided for." They are claimed to be free under the provision in paragraph 548 of the act which relieves from duty "seeds aromatic * * * which are drugs and not edible," etc.

With respect to the parsley seeds this claim must be sustained in view of Board decision G. A. 5272. The case has been submitted without evidence, the protestants merely citing the United States Dispensatory as supporting their contention. Pepper, wormwood, celeriac, dandelion, and sage are all mentioned in that authority as having medicinal properties and uses, but there appears to be no specific reference to the seeds of those plants as having such qualities. It is plainly incumbent upon the protestants to show by a fair preponderance of the evidence that the seeds in question are inedible within the meaning of paragraph 548 and are used as drugs. They have failed in this, and whatever may be the true state of facts, the rule of law which makes the collector's action presumptively correct must govern our action with regard to all of the seeds in question except the parsley seeds.

The protest is sustained as to the parsley seeds and overruled as to all other merchandise. The collector's decision is reversed to the extent indicated and affirmed in all other respects.

ASTERS.

In perusing the seedmen's catalogues one is bewildered as to what varieties to select, for they are legion, but I have at various times grown some of the American forms, and one that stands out as the grandest of all is Semple's Marvel. Sent out as a white only some few years since, it has become one of the foremost asters in the States, and now that various colors are obtainable it yields to none. Coming in later than the Comets it is of great value, as it escapes the terrible beetle that worries American growers. I still favor the white, for its huge blooms simply breathe defiance to the early chrysanthemum. Vigorous in growth, with flowers four or five inches across on twenty-inch stems, it is a wonder for cutting, and lasts for weeks. The outer florets are slightly reflexed and seem to suggest an improvement on the Victoria type. The white is not so pure as in the Giant White Comet raised by Mr. Sproule, but it is a marvelous aster, and I feel sure that the market men who are trying it this season will find it a most valuable sort.—T. W. in Gardeners' Magazine.

FT. WAYNE, IND.

Death of C. M. Auger.

Charles M. Auger, who was the first man to engage in business as a florist in Fort Wayne, and one of the pioneers in Indiana floriculture, died July 26 in France, whither he had gone nearly a year ago for a visit to the scenes of his boyhood home. He was 82 years of age.

Mr. Auger was born near Versailles in 1822. He came to America while yet a young man and in 1852 came to Fort Wayne and engaged in market and flower gardening. Later, in 1869, when the city had developed sufficiently to warrant the departure, he confined his business to that of a florist exclusively, founding the establishment which is still conducted by his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Lydia E. Auger. Mr. Auger was the pioneer in the florists' business in this city, and one of the earliest in the entire state.

FUMIGATION CALLS FIREMEN.

John D. Jenson, florist, at 1142 Broad street, held an impromptu reception of firemen at 6:15 o'clock last evening. The affair was so sudden that Mr. Jenson did not have time in which to serve pink or any other kind of tea, although with a little delay on the part of his guests he might have passed around a geranium stew a la sulphur.

Mr. Jenson had occasion to fumigate his greenhouses, and applying a match to a pot of sulphur, closed the door and hied himself to a safe spot. The houses were soon filled with smoke and presented such an alarming appearance that a citizen, who was not aware that Mr. Jenson was giving various kinds of bugs a throat treatment, sprinted after and overtook Patrolman Thomas Cannon and caused the latter to chase himself to box 219.

Mr. Jenson was enjoying a comforting pipe in his office when a lot of firemen dashed in and told him that his premises were on fire. The florist almost threw a fit before he recalled that he had set a fumigating plant to work and that it had budded beautifully. Then the firemen said sulphurous things and went back to their stations.

IOWA FLORISTS MEET.

The Perry Florists' Association had the summer meeting with M. H. Wetherbee, at Charles City, Iowa. There was the largest attendance we have had. One day was given up to riding about the city, visiting places of interest, among which was a visit to the greenhouses of the Sherman Nursery Co. All report business good and nearly all are adding some new glass this season, which speaks well for this part of the country.

A design contest was one feature of the convention and showed us all how different ones go at them. The contest was very close and all showed points of special value. The inner man was well provided for by Mr. and Mrs. Wetherbee, for which they have our thanks. The next meeting will be at Osage, in January. W. S. H.

ELMIRA, N. Y.

During the past month trade conditions have been about the usual for the summer. Roses and carnations of a good grade have been scarce and what are really good are imported stock, one dealer getting his best every day from Brampton, Ont. Carnations in the field are doing well, the rains with which we have been favored and the cool nights being just what they wanted. Housing will in many cases begin this week.

The United States Cut Flower Co. has had a force of over 100 men on construction work during the summer and the work is so far advanced that rose planting is nearly finished; they already have over 20,000 benched and the remainder will be planted this week. The power house, offices, packing rooms, coal sheds, etc., are about completed and next week three boilers will be installed. By the end of the month they expect everything to be in full working order.

Wm. Algie, president of the company, has just returned from an extended trip through Canada. He spent a part of his time at his beautiful home at Alton. Jos. V. Peirce, of New Bedford, Mass.; Geo. Cox, late of Columbia City, Ind., and Alfred G. Nason, from New Jersey, have accepted positions as growers with the company.

Sorry I missed Mr. Scott on my last visit to Buffalo, as I would have been delighted to have had the friendly advice of this sage "by wird o' mow." As it is I am thankful to Brother Scott for his encouraging advice and good wishes and coming from "a brither Scot," it is doubly welcome. Although my stature in inches may fall considerably short of some of our attenuated brethren, who, by their strenuous efforts to attain a higher plane, have succeeded in pushing their heads through their hirsute coverings, I can assure Mr. Scott that even though the projected million feet of glass was no longer a question of the future, my professional courage would be in no danger of a collapse. Call and see us, William. J. J. C.

LOUISVILLE.

The Kentucky Society of Florists has filed articles of incorporation without capital stock. The society is intended to promote social intercourse and mutual benefits between professional florists, and to encourage more extensive flower shows. The officers are as follows: Jacob Schulz, president; Herbert G. Walker, vice-president; George E. Schulz, recording secretary; Joseph Coenen, financial secretary; H. Kunzman, treasurer; Henry Fuchs, P. B. Rudy and John Bohrman, trustees.

I WOULD not think of doing without the REVIEW. It is both practical and interesting and using its advertisements has been very satisfactory.—M. MAGRUDER.

TIFFIN, OHIO.

Lewis Ullrich is having a busy time of it, remodeling his place. Four houses have been torn down and in their stead three modern ones, each 25x100, will be built this summer. These are intended for palms, ferns and miscellaneous stock. The season has proved a prosperous one, surpassing his own sanguine expectations. Nor was he ever better equipped to meet the demands of both his retail and wholesale trade. Mr. Ullrich intends planting carnations on a larger scale than heretofore, for the demand for them is steadily on the increase. White Cloud, Flora Hill, Lawson, Enchantress, Triumph, and several meritorious seedlings of his own will constitute the stock to be grown during the coming season. Triumph, as grown on this place, is by no means a back number. It seems to have retained all its vigor of constitution. Among his own seedlings there is one of the Daybreak type and color that looks very promising. A third season's test will determine its full value. Roses look clean and vigorous, the Golden Gate being Mr. Ullrich's favorite and one of the best money-makers on the place. Mr. Ullrich discovered, a few years ago, a red seedling geranium on his place which not only sells at sight but the demand for it far exceeds the supply. Ullrich's Seedling, as it is called here, is an excellent bedder and bloomer and has won many admirers. X.

ALGONA, IA.—The H. A. Richardson Co. reports very good business the past season, with prospects for still better results in the approaching one. They are adding to their glass this summer.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held July 26, President Ballantyne in the chair. The following special prizes were received for the fall exhibition: $25 for the best thirty-six blooms chrysanthemums, six varieties, $15 for first prize and $10 for second, from Mrs. Geo. Lewis, Tarrytown; $5 from C. Vanderbilt, Tarrytown, for the largest cut chrysanthemum exhibited, and $15 from A. T. Boddington, New York, for best three specimen ferns, $10 for first prize and $5 for second. A check for $100 was received from E. G. Reid, Irvington, who will be presented with a life membership in the society. Mrs. Henry Draper, Dobbs Ferry, was elected an honorary member and A. T. Boddington was elected an active member.

The monthly prize offered by Jas. Lawrie, for the best display of flowers cut from hardy shrubs, was awarded to A. McKenzie, superintendent for Samuel Untermeyer. Honorable mention was awarded to H. J. Kastberg, Dobbs Ferry. A certificate of merit was awarded to the F. R. Pierson Co. for a very fine display of hardy phlox, comprising over thirty varieties. Wm. Scott and Francis Gibson were the judges.

It was decided to have the annual outing of the society on August 17 at Rye Beach and the committee has arranged for a shore dinner at 2 o'clock. Tickets can be had by members and friends from any of the executive committee at $1 each.

After the business was disposed of, Jas. Scott opened a discussion on the forming of a gardeners' organization such as the one being formed in London, but with the exception of Mr. Scott not one of the members present seemed to be in favor of such an organization.

WICHITA, KANS.

Wichita was visited by a flood, early in July, such as was never heard of here before. At least seventy-nve per cent of the city was under water, all the way from six inches to four feet deep. Water covered the parks, killing all blooming plants except the cannas and at least thirty per cent of the shrubs are killed. F. Kuechenmeister, whose greenhouses are located near the park, suffered the loss of his whole stock, water being three feet deep in his houses and field. His loss is heavy, as he did not save anything. He lost 10,000 fine carnations ready to be benched, 2,500 young roses, and shrubs of all kinds. He has had fine success with carnations. His soil seems to be just suited for them, but in some places the top soil is all washed off. C. A. Rose lost all his stock, principally chrysanthemums and summer blooming plants. W. H. Culp suffered the least, although the street was like a river in front of his place. A. T. Buckridge, in the north part of the city, lost roses and carnations.

In the eastern part of the city, Chas. P. Mueller had just purchased a fine piece of land, expecting to move his buildings, and had planted all his summer and winter blooming plants, some 25,000 or 30,000, with the best prospect he has ever had, yet all were taken in forty-eight hours' time. He has given up building for this year and possibly longer, as it will take from one to two years to make up his loss. He was enjoying a splendid local as well as shipping business. M.

TORONTO.

The Market.

The cut flower market has picked up considerably during the last week and the supply has correspondingly decreased. Roses and carnations are very short, while asters are only in fair supply as yet. Sweet peas are good and the supply about equal to demand. Lilies of all kinds are scarce.

Various Notes.

The Toronto delegation to the Ottawa convention will be large unless present indications are astray. The Toronto florists should make as good a showing as the east did at the Toronto convention. Everybody go, and make a success of our annual Canadian Horticultural Association convention. Nothing is more needed to make the convention a success than your presence at Ottawa. D. J.

OUR DONATIONS.

Under the head of Chicago Notes in the issue of July 7 are a few emphatic remarks above the signature of O. W. Frese, relative to the imposition that is practiced on the Chicago florists by a request and, it appears, almost a demand for flowers as a donation by various people and institutions. Mr. Frese seems to have suffered most at the hands of what he calls "Sisters." Sisters, it is true, have been the leaders in the abuse of the florists' good nature, for all women are sisters. But, from our experience, the Sisters of Charity, if those are meant, have been by no means the chief offenders. We have many good customers among these worthy people. It is true that if they come from the Emerald isle, or happen to be born in this home of the free, they are inclined to be addicted with the begging microbe and their cloth and vocation have an influence to extract "the goods" from the merchants. The unsophisticated Polish and German Sisters seem more independent and purchase and pay cheerfully for plants and flowers for their festival days. The extent to which this begging of flowers has grown in Chicago, according to Mr. Frese, is ridiculous and carried to what seems to us incredible lengths, accompanied with a large amount of gall.

How is it the wholesaler is the victim? In our city it was the retailer. If a grower has his own wholesale department he can give away, but if he is an honest commission man he has nothing to give away. The flowers aren't his. He is handling them for the consignor, and if he gives any away he should credit them as sold.

But this is a little off the subject. It is not the Sisters of Charity that have ever troubled us. It was the full blown, married sisters in almost all walks of life, except the good women who are your liberal patrons, or those not built that way. A man makes a few dollars and is elected a trustee of the United Brethren of Spiritual Inspiration church, or some other institution. The wife has a new function in life, becomes an active church worker and a philanthropist at other people's expense. Wives of G. A. R. veterans have an almost substantial call on you. To such a degree had this tax upon the florists grown in our city that it was not uncommon for a grocer's wife from the east side to sail into the store and announce that "she was going to have a euchre party tomorrow night and wouldn't we please donate a palm for a prize?" We never saw or heard of her before or since, but someone must have told her the florists were "real easy." So, after suffering for years with this humbug, the Florists' Club got together very much in earnest and passed a resolution, agreeing that we would donate neither plants nor flowers to any church, institution or individual for any purpose whatsoever. Church, charity bazaar or euchre party, it was all cut out. A copy of the agreement was signed by every florist in the city and neighborhood.

The city papers published the same and a framed copy hangs in a conspicuous place in all florists' stores or places of business. It was the best day's work the florists of our city ever did. No unpleasant excuse is now needed. We just point to the little 6x8 sign and that settles it. It did its work well, and the beggars of both sexes and all conditions of life were soon aware of our agreement.

It is not to be supposed that this resolution has not been occasionally violated, because there are cases and circumstances where the florist feels it not only his duty but a pleasure to contribute toward some worthy object. For instance, some lady who buys liberally and gracefully throughout the year says, "There is a class of trained nurses to graduate from the General Hospital tonight. Would you mind sending a few palms for the stage? I assure you they will be much appreciated." In such cases there may have been violations of our solemn covenent, and no harm if there was, but it has choked off entirely the chronic leech and beggar, and the good people never did bother us.

I forgot to say above that the resolution signed by all imposed a fine of $25 on anyone detected in making a donation. No fines yet imposed in seven years. Still the agreement has been of the greatest benefit, and largely faithfully kept.

Get together, you army of florists of Chicago. You have no more business to be imposed upon than the jewelers, or hatters, or milliners. Just let me add that a few days after our action was published in the daily papers, our most valued customers took occasion to congratulate us on the stand we had taken.

I suppose it is a fact that many thoughtless people do not realize that it costs anything to produce our flowers and if we have a hundred roses in the ice box and sell fifty we might just as well give away the other fifty. We have made lots of money anyway.

Then, unfortunately, there is the individual (sorry I am to say it, but it is generally poor, dear woman) who desires to dispense much charity at other people's expense. They are continually soliciting and begging donations of flowers or other delicacies for poor Mrs. Tubbs, who is confined to her bed with lumbago. The florist, or candy man, or grocer is really doing the charity part of it, but they don't get any of the glory.

I have a vivid recollection of a large lady who would sail into the shop and after three or four heavy respirations and undulations of her expansive chest, as much as to say, "well, here I am again," she would begin: "Well, I'm always buying flowers, but I never buy them for myself, hardly ever. Mr. B. says he never saw such a woman, always doing something for somebody else. What have you got this morning that's real pretty and cheap? Mind these are not for myself. If they were I wouldn't mind the price, but they are for one of my hired girls' mother who fell down stairs last week and she's terribly shook up. Mind I can't afford much because they are not for me. It's charity you know." And then one of those sweet charity smiles is bestowed on you, that would stiffen up butter in sultry weather. You produce a dozen roses and shade the price away down, yet instead of thanks a hand is outstretched touching up a rose or two as not being fresh. About that time you feel as if there was a small Mount Pelee working inside you, yet you must suppress it. Often have we undergone this ordeal, only far more elaborate and beyond my descriptive power, when we could not escape to the rear or under a bench.

Well, one day this good woman had the misfortune, in a carriage accident, to fracture the upper section of her left lower limb, and for many months she had to stop indoors. Her husband, a splendid man (poor man) never failed to come around at least every other day and buy from $1.50 to $2.50 worth of flowers for the invalid. Whatever was nice suited him and so did the price. He seemed delightfully cheerful when buying those flowers. No doubt the joy of taking them home was sincere, yet his gaiety of spirit was so marked while Mrs. B. was confined to her bed and his purchases from us so frequent and liberal that I cannot help thinking there was more than one regretted this large lady's convalescence.

To give to the poor, the needy and deserving is a most hallowed pleasure. It is like mercy. "Twice blest, it blesses him that gives and him that receiveth. It becomes the king better than his crown." But the army of busybodies and small-souled creatures that pester the florists, and many other business men, should be severely repressed. Stamp them out as you would the scarlet fever or the glanders.

CADILLAC, MICH.

The name of Cadillac is becoming famous, but in other lines besides the florists' business. It is only a few years ago that we were considered "up in the pine woods," but with the passing of the pine there has been left a thriving city of 7,000 inhabitants, bordering the banks of a beautiful lake. The problem of utilizing the pine lands will undoubtedly be solved in time by the establishment of an experimental station by Solon L. Goode. Four forties are being stumped, and experimental work will be commenced next spring to ascertain just what the soil needs to make it useful for all kinds of crops. Potatoes will grow there, and many a farmer has paid for his farm with one crop of potatoes. Not only is agriculture to receive a new impetus, but up-to-date greenhouses and up-to-date methods are sure to prevail in this hitherto benighted region. According to the Chinaman, carnations are to be grown four to six inches in size and roses like saucers. The grocer and baker and candlestick maker have partaken of the inspiration and plants and flowers could be obtained from Tom, Dick and Harry this spring, each willing and anxious to share the florists' burden of riches.

Notwithstanding the jolts and jars, A. W. Tweedie reports a good business and plants sold out clean. He is hard at work planning for a larger trade next year.

Kleinhans & Mason, the new firm, are busy putting up their houses and have the frames up for three, with glass in one of them. They have completed a neat residence and Mr. Kleinhans and family are installed therein. They have 2,000 carnations in the field and are getting ready to share in the city's prosperity.

This has been a good growing season and plants of all kinds are in excellent condition, considering the late spring, the flower beds at the cemetery being especially attractive.

This city narrowly escaped a severe hailstorm recently. It is a noticeable fact that we have not been visited by any serious storms for nearly two years.

A. W. T.

MONTICELLO, IND.—A. V. Otslot is building a house, obtaining roof material from Dietsch.

CLIFTON, PA.—Hoffman Brothers, of Lansdowne Heights, have purchased the large greenhouses of J. Hackert, located at Sixty-second and Buist avenue, in the city, and in the future they will carry on the business.

I must say your Zinc Points have given great satisfaction. I have over 125 lbs. on my houses, and feel justified in stating they are the best point on the market.—W. K. Partridge, Lockland, O.

In our 25 years' experience with glazing points of all kinds, your Zinc Points are the best to date.—Grant-Wilson Floral Co., Cleveland, O.

We think they are the best things we have ever used to hold glass on greenhouses.—W. A. Hammond, Richmond, Va.

They have outlasted all others used, therefore are better and cheaper.—Theo. F. Beckert, Glenfield, Pa.

The first lot we had from you two years ago are still holding their own, and intend to do so for years to come. They are "fine as silk."—Butz Brothers, New Castle, Pa.

We never used anything for the purpose that has given such good satisfaction.—Phoenix Nursery Co., Bloomington, Ill.

I can truthfully say your Zinc Points are the best I ever used. They are easily driven and withdrawn and are stiff. PIPING.

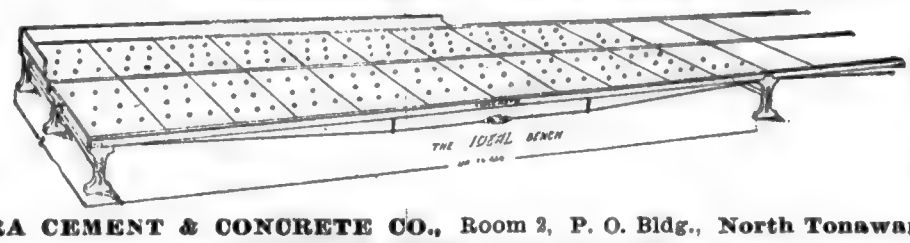
We have a greenhouse running east and west 16x75 feet, north wall five feet six inches, boarded up, south wall thirty inches of glass and thirty-six inches of boards. The west end is boarded up and the east is board and glass, the same as the south wall. Even span, eleven feet from ground to gable. We have a No. 186 Ideal water back heater that we wish to use. With a 3-inch supply pipe running the full length seven feet from the ground and 1½-inch returns, how many runs under benches will it take to keep a temperature of 60 degrees in zero weather? The boiler is supposed to have a heating capacity of 1,025 feet. Will the boiler maintain this temperature? Would it be better to have the supply pipe under the middle bench? F. G.

If, as you state, your boiler has a capacity for 1,025 feet of radiation it is amply large to heat nearly double the space you now have, as your house will require only about 540 feet of radiation to maintain the desired temperature with water at 180 degrees. You will undoubtedly get good satisfaction from carrying the main flow pipe near the ridge to the far end of the house and there dividing it to supply coils under the side and middle benches, or, if it is more convenient to carry the supply pipe under the center bench, the number of returns under the bench can be reduced and the heat evenly distributed by increasing the number of returns under the side benches. In either event you should use, in addition to the 3-inch flow pipe, twelve 1½-inch returns. These may be distributed under the benches in the house so as to provide an extra pipe along the side most exposed. L. C. C.



Shiremanstown, Pa.—John F. Rupp reports orders coming in at a most gratifying rate and all hands rushed in getting them out promptly.

CHRYSANTHEMUMS

TAKING THE BUDS.

We are now approaching the critical period of chrysanthemum growing, the period when blunders are costly and cannot very well be remedied if made. I refer to the taking of the buds. These remarks apply more particularly, perhaps, to the growers for exhibition than to the commercial cut flower grower. The latter in many cases has not long finished planting and the question of buds will not trouble him for several weeks, but with the future exhibitor the case is different. He knows that to get the largest flowers he must get an early bud with the majority of varieties, and though he stands to lose a few flowers altogether, by taking the bud too early, he has to take some chances.

Buds that form in August are invariably what are known as crown buds, and these crown buds also almost invariably produce the largest flowers. The crown bud is always known by the fact of its having three or four tiny shoots springing out around it. In the case of terminal buds these shoots do not appear but six or eight smaller buds will be found clustered around the larger central one.

All this, of course, is old to the expert grower but we are writing for the benefit of those who are not experts. Many of these latter have an idea that buds taken very early will mean that the flowers will develop much earlier. This does not necessarily follow, though some kinds do come in a week or so earlier, particularly if the weather runs very warm in October. As a general thing, though, there is little difference in the time of development of the different buds, but, as may naturally be expected, there is considerable difference in the size of the flowers. While the early bud is swelling, and petals are developing, the later bud is not yet even formed, as the plant has an additional growth to make and develop before bud formation can begin. I have been told that since the crown bud never makes a flower if the plant is permitted to grow naturally without any disbudding, the later bud is really the natural one and should therefore be the best. To this I can only reply that "this is an art that doth mend nature."

One of the questions that will arise first in the mind of the novice is, how early, to be reasonably safe, can he take a bud? I have for many years fixed for myself the third week in August as a date when I considered it safe to take any bud that I could find ready. Some will come all right taken even earlier, but they need careful handling and experience, and unless one has taken buds early in August before with success it is not wise to go into it too heavily. If a bud begins to show too early it can be held on the plant a week or more almost stationary, by not rubbing off more than one or two of the previously mentioned shoots, and leaving the others for a time to divert the flow of sap from the bud. It is a good idea, in fact, at any time to leave one or more shoots below the bud for a week or so to act as a kind of safety valve. When all the growths are rubbed off close and all the energies of the plant are directed on a tiny bud no larger than a pin's head, it is hardly to be wondered at if the bud sometimes fails to mature properly.

Some growers complain that when they take the crown bud the flower runs away from the foliage, leaving a long, bare neck. While some kinds will do this no matter how they are grown, it is quite often the fault of the grower in having his plants make a long, soft, sappy growth by excessive watering and lack of proper ventilation, when really the plants should now be showing signs of maturity my making short, stocky growth, with bark showing up the stems like the bark on a tree. Well ripened wood is one of the secrets of the big flowers and to get well ripened wood one must plant early and grow as cool and hard as possible. I have never been bothered by lack of foliage in taking crown buds. Some people profess great admiration for a solid column of foliage with the flower squat right down on it, but I personally would rather see the flowers stand out above with about an inch of bare stem showing before the foliage commences. It accentuates the size of the flower and a vase of such flowers has a lighter, more graceful appearance in my eyes.

Every one should have a little note book and put down in it the times he takes certain buds. Mark the plants and then when the flowers appear he can see for himself which bud produced the best flowers and this will be valuable information gained for next season. Hit or miss methods never pan out successfully in any business, least of all in a delicate operation like disbudding chrysanthemums.

While some of our American seedlings are better on a bud taken early in September, notably the well known Appleton, all of the imported varieties give best results when taken on the August crown; in fact, the late bud produces in many cases a flower that is practically useless.

These remarks apply to my district, the eastern coast. Things may work differently in the interior of the country but where one is writing for readers scattered all over a vast country like this, growers should take into some account their location and apply the lesson accordingly.

BRIAN BORU.

J. J. Beneke, President St. Louis Florists' Club.

THE BEST SHOOT.

Please state the best and safest shoot to leave on chrysanthemums to get the best bud after August 10. Is the first or second the better to leave on the plant?

J. C.

I prefer, as a general thing, to leave the second shoot on the plant to grow on, as the first sometimes makes a short growth of several inches and then produces another bud. After a plant has made a break it is not wise to be in too big a hurry to remove all the shoots not needed to run on. Let the shoots make a growth of several inches; then it can be determined with safety just which would be the best one to leave.

Brian Boru.

ROSES.

Work About the Buildings.

If there are any defects in the glass, such as blisters, which cause burning spots, they should be gone over and touched with either oil or a solution of alum. Apart from the unsightly appearance these burned spots give a house, their effect on the plants is debilitating, destroying the usefulness of the foliage, causing weakness and checking root action. The time and trouble devoted to obliterating these spots will be amply repaid in the robustness and vigor of growth obtained.

While the weather is yet warm and the wood-work dry, is the proper time to look over the roofs, gutters, etc., and have the necessary repairs attended to. If the roofs are old and the sash bars decayed and ordinary puttying would entail too much labor, Old English putty applied with the putty bulb along the edges will render them tight for at least one season. Particular care and pains should be taken to close all cracks along the gutters, as this is where the cold air pours in, causing just the conditions favorable to the germination of mildew spores. As long as these cracks are left open it is impossible to keep the houses clear of this pest, however intelligently we may apply all the other preventives and remedies; in fact, to obtain the best results in a rose house we must eliminate as far as possible all drip and draughts.

Any painting that may be necessary should also be done while the wood is in a fit condition. A clean and neat exterior, besides being attractive, is an almost certain index of the condition of the interior and stock and often gives us a correct line on the quality of the management.

Boilers should be cleaned and overhauled and put into condition for the winter's work, fire boxes and grates repaired and pipes lined up and tested. Ventilators also should be readjusted and everything put into shape for the winter.

These matters are often allowed to drift along till after the best part of the season is over and the danger from frost becomes imminent. Then the work has to be hurried through and the nearer the danger point approaches and time becomes precious, the work is done in such a hurried and imperfect manner that our troubles are sure to be multiplied during the winter. A little foresight and energy now will place us beyond these worries and risks. Ribes.

DISBUDDING TEAS.

Please tell me how large the teas should be before I cut off the bud and half the stem, as you advised. Is it good to let the plants reach a certain size? Do you pay any attention to the color of the buds? C. A. P.

It is better to allow the buds to show a little color before disbudding, as this is an evidence that the eyes on the flower stem have approached the woody stage at which the eyes are fully developed. If the plants are very small and where cutting off half the flower stem would denude the plant of too large a percentage of foliage, it is better to simply nip off the buds. This is the treatment usually accorded to plants while in two and one-half-inch and three-inch pots. Ribes.

CARNATIONS

Seasonable Care.

After you have your carnations planted a week or ten days, if you have not allowed them to suffer, you will be able to see that the roots have taken hold. As soon as the plants will hold up fresh without any syringing during the day you should begin to remove the shade by degrees. This removing the shade and getting the plants inured to the strong rays of the sun is almost as severe on the plants as the transplanting was. If it is done too suddenly and the plants are exposed to the fierce sunshine we are apt to have at this time of the year, they will wilt badly and suffer proportionately. A severe check is sure to follow and some of the plants may never recover. The less syringing you did and, of course, kept your plants fresh, the less would your plants suffer, as the growth would have had less chance to become soft.

Great care must be given to watering, too, during the first month after planting. After you can see that the roots have taken hold nicely let the soil get tolerably dry on the surface. Not powder dry, but just dry enough to let the sun sweeten it. While it is tolerably dry go over the beds and stir the soil about a half inch deep and level it off. After the plants have the full sun I like to water the whole bed instead of just around the plants. There is little danger of the soil souring if you allow it to get into the proper condition before each watering and I think the plants do better, as the soil does not get so hot. Keep the soil stirred to keep it sweet and to kill the weeds. If there are any spots that appear to have soured a little, sprinkle on a little air-slaked lime and stir it into the soil, and water carefully thereafter.

Soon after the plants get to going nicely you should begin with your insect preventives. I do not like to smoke during this hot weather, as the ventilators have to be closed while smoking. Far better for the plants is a good spraying with a nicotine extract like To-bakine liquid, which will kill the insects just as well as the tobacco smoke and with less harm to the plants. Spray at least once in two weeks for a preventive, but spray oftener if necessary to eradicate a pest that may have gotten a foothold. Always keep in mind the old adage about the ounce of prevention being worth a pound of cure. If you are troubled with sow-bugs on your place, don't wait until they begin to chew up your plants. Mix some sugar and Paris green and drop a little here and there on the edge-board and you will soon be rid of them. A. F. J. Baur.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Diseased or Withered Foliage.

Very few varieties pass through the ordeal of transplanting without losing more or less foliage and still less can be said to be free from objectionable if not diseased leaves. Although it is claimed by some that the removal of such foliage is unnecessary and a waste of time, there remains the possibility that the work may not have been properly done.

I will admit it is tedious work at best but aside from the benefit to plants, the improved appearance of a bench so treated, gives the grower a sense of pride. The best help on the place should be set at this work, as carelessness, impatience or rough handling will tend to do more harm than good.

Plants should be established and growing vigorously before beginning the operation and, as it is advisable always to remove all rubbish from the house, choose a time previous to the bench soil being broken up, as this allows those dropped to be more easily gathered.

If the foliage to be removed is completely shriveled there is less liability of damage being done than if partially green and on this account it is not advisable to clean up the plants too soon. Leaning the plants too far sideways when going over them and trying to rush the job by picking the leaves off in handfuls is responsible for injury to tender roots or the breaking down of branches and young shoots; also tearing off bark, and in my opinion the reason for some growers reaching the conclusion that the practice does not pay; but any operation aiding in the admission of air around the stem and lower branches will pay if intelligently done, the more so when it also reduces the chances of disease germs finding a lodging place.

Supports.

The carnation being naturally of sprawly growth, the question of supports can be considered next in importance to good plants, not only that we may obtain straight stems but by actual test it has been found that a plant will give an increased number of blooms if properly supported. Varieties differ somewhat in habit, but in any case the plants should not be crowded into a small compass or tied in a way to bunch the foliage together, for, as before stated, being naturally of sprawly growth, too much restriction will be quickly resented. The air must have free access to every part of the plant.

There are various supports on the market, each having its special advantages. Many growers stretch wire lengthwise of the bench and runs strings across, some adding wire netting bent in shape of an inverted V between the rows to prevent the lower branches touching the soil.

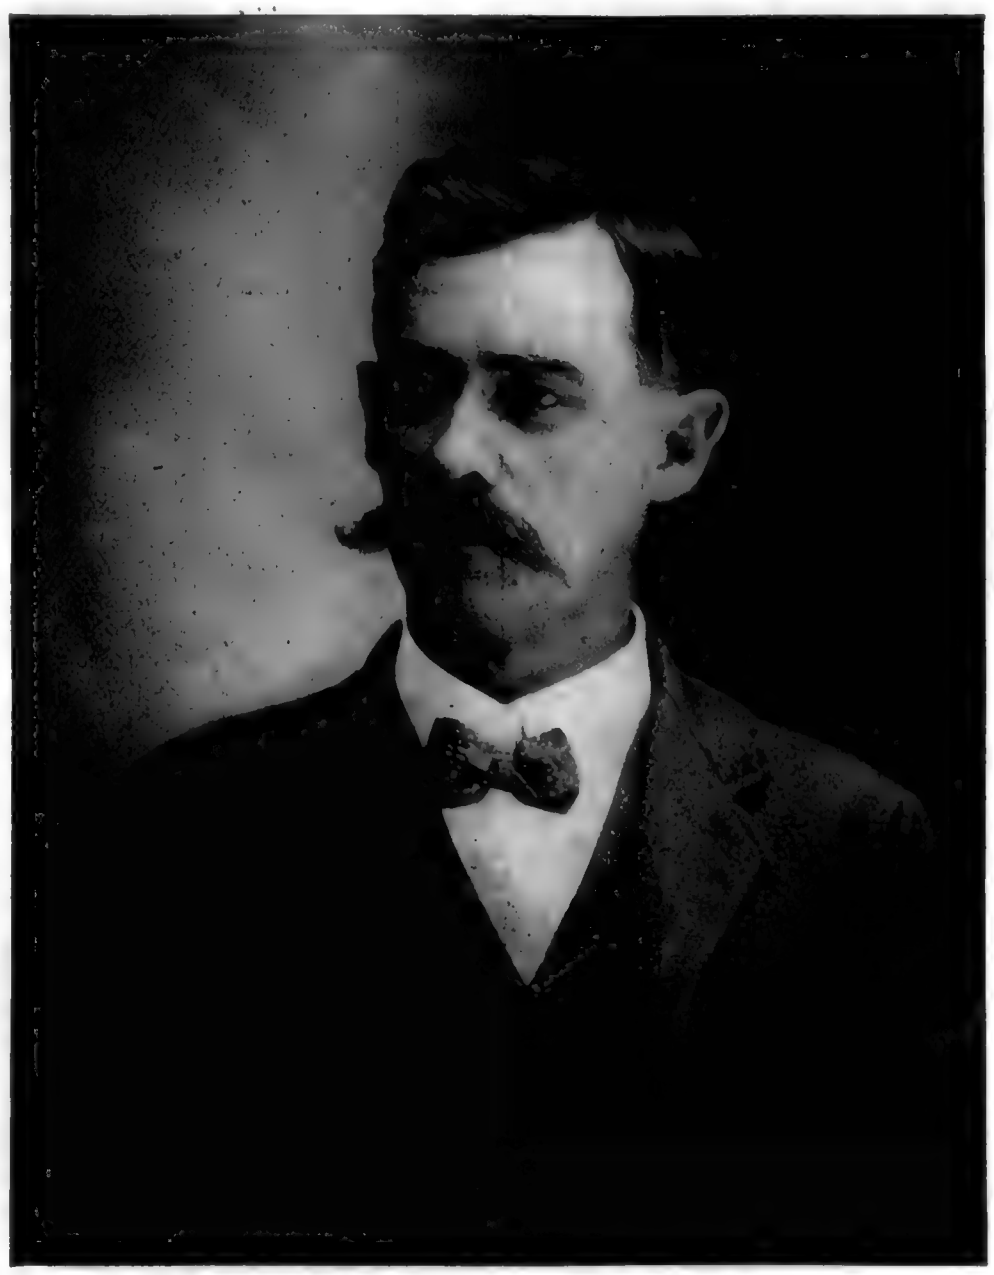
None of these can be called the ideal, in that one does not meet the requirements of all varieties, so each grower must select means of support to suit the varieties grown or as circumstances permit, the main points to be kept in mind being not to cramp the plants or prevent easy access to soil for the purpose of weeding or cultivation and the application of mulch, fertilizers in dry or in liquid form.

Personally I favor adjustable individual supports on account of the advantage their name would imply, of being adjustable to varieties of different habit. Being independent of each other, any number can be put up or taken down at any time without affecting others.



Whatever style is adopted, get the material in readiness, as they will soon be needed in some varieties and much labor will be saved if put up as needed by the several varieties.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

THE BUFFALO SHOW.

The H. A. Meldrum department store at Buffalo announces its third flower show, to be given November 9 to 12, under the auspices of the Buffalo Florists' Club, with Charles H. Keitsch superintendent.

The premium list was prepared by a committee of the Florists' Club and is very liberal. In many respects it is a model for shows of its scope. An effort has been made to avoid too many classes and so distribute the funds at command as to bring out the strongest competition. The premiums for fifty cut mums are $25, $15 and $10 in each color; for twenty-five blooms the premiums are $10, $8 and $6. These classes are open to local growers only, but the same sums are offered for vases of fifty open to all. For 100 blooms in twenty-five varieties $50, $30 and $20 is offered and the same sums for 100 blooms arranged for effect. For twenty-five blooms Wm. Duckham $15 and $10 is offered, $25 for fifty blooms of a variety not yet disseminated, and $25 for the best display of pompons.

Emil Schray, Secretary St. Louis Florists' Club.

The two best vases of 100 carnations will divide $25. For 100 Beauties $50, $35 and $25 is offered. For 100 roses, white, pink and red, $15, $10 and $5 is offered for each color.

Intending exhibitors should address Chas. H. Keitsch, 810 Main street, Buffalo, for a copy of the list.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Calceolaria and Cineraria.

There are not many seeds to sow just now, except perhaps some calceolaria and cineraria, both beautiful plants when well grown and poor things when poorly grown. Hundreds of men who are masters, or think they are, of the rose and carnation would make a botch with either of these soft, cheap plants. They are both plants which delight in a cool temperature, so choose the coolest place you have for sowing the seeds, which are best sown in a pan. The seeds of cineraria can be very slightly covered with finely sifted leaf-mold. The calceolaria seed is so small that no covering is needed, just pressed into the smooth surface of the soil is enough. Keep the soil uniformly moist until the little seedlings are up. With these minute seeds you are always in danger of sowing too thickly. Avoid it, if you can. After they are up they should have full light, but as cool and airy a situation as possible.

Ferns for Dishes.

There does not seem to be any decline in the fern-dish business. I am glad to say that all who can afford it now have a bunch of fresh flowers or a pretty dish of growing ferns on the dinner table. Now is the time to buy your stock. Flats of seedling ferns are a good investment, for there is plenty of time to grow them on. If not, buy the smallest plants you can. The ferns we use for this purpose are from various climes and nearly all will endure and like the fullest light and many thrive in a high temperature, but nearly or quite all these ferns want moisture, both in atmosphere and soil, and they dislike anything like fire-heat influence at the roots. I have seen many a nice lot of small 2-inch ferns ruined by warm sand or ashes from hot pipes beneath the bench. Keep their roots cool.

Spraying With Tobacco.

Without wishing to intrude on the specialists in the rose, carnation, chrysanthemum or violet departments, it seems to me that some observations on the use of Nikoteen will not be out of place. It may seem expensive, and for the quantity, about a pint at $1.50 per bottle, it is a costly extract, but a little goes a long ways and what consideration is first cost if $1.50 worth of prevention will produce $50 worth of healthy, good flowers? It kills all aphides, black, green, brown or variegated. It leaves no stain on flowers or foliage, is easily applied, and while it rids you of aphides, it incidentally destroys red spider and thrips.

Smoking Not Obsolete.

Fumigating with tobacco is not likely to be ever entirely obsolete, for in a house of mixed plants, while there may be a few injured by the smoke, it pervades all corners and is a cheap destroyer of aphides, but is of little use against spider and thrips. It is with the specialist, or, rather, with the house of one kind of plant that Nikoteen is most valuable. The strength to which it should be diluted varies in the opinion of some. One reliable firm says one part Nikoteen to 600 of water. We have used it double this strength with safety. Then, again, the common greenfly that infests our lilies, roses, etc., succumbs to a weaker solution than red spider or thrips. It is almost impossible to apply the spray properly without the automatic sprayer sold by all the seedsmen.

I want to say here that I have not used or seen it used on violets, but I cannot believe that it would be injurious to the foliage of the violets and if it keeps down the greasy black aphis that infests the violet about three quarters of the difficulty of violet culture will be solved.

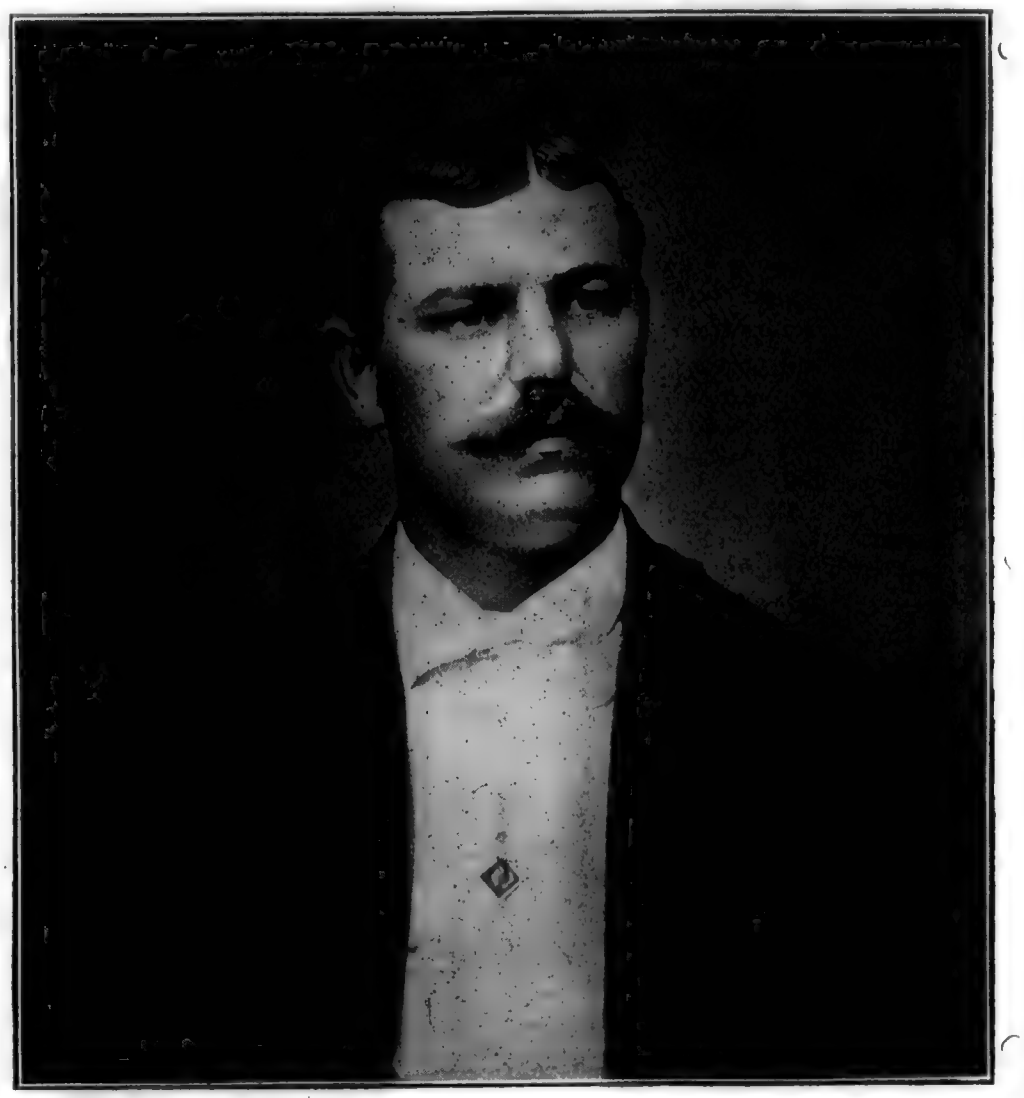
A first-class rose grower, who also grows carnations, says he uses it for everything. Another good gardener, who grows carnations and chrysanthemums largely, and some violets and mixed stock, says it kills the blackfly on the mums as well as the spider and thrips on any plants. Carnations it keeps clean of everything. The same man volunteered the statement that last fall he sprayed open flowers of white mums just to see the effect and there was no stain or color on their immaculate whiteness.

I have had to remark before that it is well we have these enemies to fight. It is half our business to combat them and if they were non-existent most any old woman, male or female, could produce "posies." At the same time, anything that will relieve the poor florist of some of his troubles will be a blessing and we shall not grow rich any too fast even if we can easily keep down our minute enemies. In the above I have not the slightest motive other than to benefit my brother florists.

For Beetles.

Some weeks ago the writer expressed a desire that a reader of the Review would tell us of some destroyer of the carnation beetle, as we had tried several things and failed. A man of large experience writes me that Slug Shot will kill them. This, as a powder, is easily applied and perfectly harmless to the plants. We have only tried it about a week, but on looking over the beds we did not find any beetles. So far so good.

William Scott.



ST. LOUIS HOTELS.

The following circular letter has been sent to the trade and should be noted by everyone who will attend the convention:

This circular is issued to call to your attention the desirability of informing me by return mail of the exact character of accommodations you will want for yourself and other members of your party at the 20th Annual Convention of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists.

It will be impossible to secure reasonable rates at the three or four leading down-town hotels. Many of them are charging what they call room-capacity rates. If one person occupies a room he pays almost as much per day as though it were occupied by two or more people. It will be the policy of the Hotel Committee, of which I am chairman, to room delegates in the smaller family hotels and private homes in the West End, many of which are now opened for the first time to World's Fair visitors. We can procure rooms in residences on direct car lines to the Convention Hall and to the Fair, and about midway between, for from 75 cents each for two persons in a room to $1.50, and for $1.00 to $2.50 for one person in a room.

Please write me on receipt of this as to whether you would like accommodations in a private house, a family hotel, or a temporary structure put up for Fair visitors, and charging from $1.00 to $2.50 per day, depending on whether one or more persons occupy the room.

J. F. Ammann, Chairman Reception Committee, St. Louis Florists' Club.

If you have a large party it might be well to wire me instructions. There are only four or five down-town hotels that will care for visitors at $3.00 a day and under. I am making contracts with these hotels so far as possible. Some of them do not like to make advance engagements. We shall have ample accommodations at reasonable rates and can direct you to your room from Union Station, so that you can go to them from the train, if you will inform us promptly of your needs. We expect to take excellent care of all our visitors, and shall provide through a Bureau at the Convention Hall, Thirteenth and Olive streets, for those who fail to make advance reservation. Advance reservations, however, will facilitate our efforts and greatly convenience those making them.

Very truly,

FRANK M. ELLIS,
Chairman Hotel Committee.

ST. LOUIS WEATHER.

The weather at St. Louis this summer is reported more than ordinarily enjoyable. Here are the highest temperatures for each day so far this month:

Aug. 2	82	Aug. 7	78

WASHINGTON A CANDIDATE.

At a largely attended meeting of the Washington Florists' Club August 2 the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Florists' Club of Washington, D. C., that they present a cordial invitation to the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists to hold the twenty-first annual convention, August, 1905, in this city, the capital of the greatest nation on earth.

President W. F. Gude adds: "You are all aware we have a gigantic world's fair here at all times, a visit to which is alone worth a week's stay without any convention attractions. The hotel accommodations are second to none in any city; a sight-seeing system, the finest in the world, and attractions too numerous to mention."

WINTER SWEET PEAS.

Referring to notes in the Review for August 4, A. C. Zvolanek writes that the Lake View Rose Gardens, whose methods were commented on by W. S., have used his seed for some years. He gives the following directions:

Christmas, pink.—Sow in the first part of September three to five seeds to one square foot in the bench. If not room ready this time, sow in 4-inch pots outdoors, but never allow to become pot bound. When three to four inches high, plant inside one square foot apart, in good compost soil. Keep moist steady. Give as much air as possible. The temperature should be 45 to 50 degrees at night, 55 to 68 in the daytime. These sweet peas, if attended well, will bloom from Christmas to late in spring. If sown in November, will bloom in February.

Miss Florence Denzer, white.—Sow the first part of September in fresh sand, in a cool, good ventilated propagating bench, and when one to two inches high, plant in 2½ to 3-inch pots. Keep moist and well ventilated. When three to four inches high, plant in good compost soil, one plant to a square foot. Keep wet steady. Give as much air as possible. The temperature should be 45 to 50 degrees at night, 55 to 68 in daytime. These sweet peas will bloom from Christmas to late in the spring. Grows six feet and over. If sown in November, will bloom in February.

THE YOUNGEST FLORIST.

With regard to the notes on the youngest florist which appeared in the Review for August 4, attention is called to the fact that H. L. Menand, of Albany, N. Y., is only 25 years of age, but has already established a fine business in florists' supplies and decorative greens, in which he is the only dealer in the central portion of New York. Mr. Menand is the son of the late Louis Menand, who was one of the oldest and best known florists in the country. The young man proposes to eventually do a general wholesale florists' business, handling cut flowers as well as other supplies. On Wednesday, July 27, he was married to Miss Augusta Clark, of Troy, which event will probably tend to further stimulate his ambitions.

Another successful young Philadelphia florist is Charles F. Edgar, senior partner in the wholesale firm of C. F. Edgar & Co., who is only 21 years of age. They have a very nice business and bright prospects for the future.

HOLIDAY PLANTS.

[A paper by William Gammage, of London, Ont., read before the Canadian Horticultural association at Ottawa, August 10, 1904.]

My topic may be divided under two or three headings. First, what are holiday plants? This may be answered in one or more ways and depends largely upon the class of trade that the florist is catering to. In establishments where the trade demands only the best and prices are no particular object, the varieties of plants will differ very materially from those offered by an establishment catering to the general public. If you are a retailer, growing and selling your own plants, you will require a larger number of varieties than if you are growing for the wholesale market, and it is with this class that we shall deal first.

Christmas Plants.

As the Christmas holidays will be the first it is now time that preparations were well under way with some of the plants that you will require at that time. In flowering plants Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is probably the leader. These should now be well established in 2½-inch or 3-inch pots. It is not my intention to give cultural instructions for the various plants which will be mentioned but with this one variety there seems to be some lack of knowledge as to how it should be handled. To begin with, cuttings should be made during May and June, either from the leaf or the shoots which come abundantly from the roots of the stock plants. These, if kept growing along in a light, airy house, will make fine plants in 4-inch or 4½-inch pots by the first of September. There is one peculiarity about this variety of begonia, that it will stand what may be termed over-potting; that is, it appears to thrive best in what may be considered a pot one or two sizes too large for any other variety of plant. Of course, great care must be taken in handling it; a careless hand in watering will soon sour the soil and then you may as well dump your plant. Our experience has been that it requires a light shade and for this purpose we have used cheese-cloth on a roller, shading it in bright weather and allowing it the clear glass on cloudy days. The flowers should be kept picked off until about the first week in November, when it should have its last shift into a 5-inch or 6-inch pot. If kept in a temperature of from 58 to 60 degrees, at Christmas it will be at its best and will continue to bloom and give the best of satisfaction for the next three or four months.

Other varieties of plants, which should have immediate attention, are cyclamen, Chinese primrose, Primula obconica, cinerarias and poinsettias. All of these are sold in large quantities and no florist doing a general business can well be without any of the varieties mentioned. In addition to these you will require some azaleas. Such varieties as Deutsche Perle, Vervæneana, Simon Mardner and Apollo are easily brought into bloom for the Christmas holidays in a temperature of from 65 to 70 degrees.

C. A. Kuehn, Superintendent Trade Exhibition.

For the last four or five years Boston ferns have held a prominent place in the list of holiday plants; in fact, their popularity superseded the palm for a time. These are grown in large quantities and if you have not already laid in your stock it is high time that it should be done. Plants that have been grown in the bench during the summer, lifted and potted into 5, 6 or 7-inch pots during September make splendid specimens for the holidays.

Palms, rubbers and araucarias are always in demand and no florist should be without a stock of these. Let me here say, do not delay putting in a stock of these until your customers are asking for them, or the weather becomes cold. You can buy better plants during September or October with less risk and expense in delivering than at a later date. Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri, in pots and pans, also mixed ferns in pans, are desirable holiday plants. You must not overlook a few Roman hyacinths and Paper White narcissi. For the general florist the above mentioned plants will about fill the bill for the Christmas holidays.

To those catering to the best trade, your time is too valuable to waste on many of the foregoing plants. You can afford only to deal in such varieties as are conveniently handled and will bring prices ranging from $1 up. For these I would recommend Begonia Gloire de Lorraine in 8-inch and 10-inch pans, which should sell at from $3 to $5 each; cyclamens in from 8-inch to 10-inch pans; azaleas from 12-inch to 20-inch crowns; poinsettias in pans and baskets; specimen plants of Boston and Piersoni ferns in pots and pans, from 8-inch to 12-inch and larger; palms, dracænas, pandanuses and such other plants as the trade in your particular locality may demand.

Marketing the Product.

Having made your preparations for the holiday trade, by laying in a good stock of plants, your next attention will be to disposing of them to the best advantage and placing them in your customers' hands in the best possible condition. Your name is your best advertisement; obliging clerks, your store window and a liberal use of the daily press will make the combination necessary to dispose of your stock at this particular season.

Nearly all classes of plants are improved by pot covers of one description or another. Let the clerk who has the best conception of color arrangements select these. Too often we see the beauty of a plant detracted from by an injudicious trimming, be it a pot cover or a ribbon that does not harmonize with the shading of the flower. It is very seldom that nature can be improved upon by adding ribbon to either a flowering or an ornamental plant and its use should be discountenanced by all true lovers of art.

To avoid confusion and mistakes at a busy time, a thorough system must be adopted. As soon as a plant is sold it should be tagged, the cards put in an envelope and carefully attached to the plant and the plant set aside with those of the same date and time to be delivered. Every plant, no matter how small or how large, should be thoroughly wrapped before being sent out for delivery. The name and the address of the person to whom it is to be delivered should be carefully and legibly written on the tag. These are minor details but it is these small details which save time and annoyance, not to say losses, to ourselves and disappointment to our customers.

Forcing and Packing.

Now the wholesale man, who is growing for the trade, will adopt different methods. He will grow but few lines and specialize on these. His experience will teach him the proper time that these should be brought in. Should it happen that he is a little late and has to force hard, in order to have them in on time, he must not forget that satisfaction to his customers must be his first consideration, and in order that his plants may prove satisfactory they must have a few days in a house of cooler temperature to prepare them for the store man or customer. His crop having been prepared, his next step is to advise his customers what he has on hand, giving in detail their exact condition and value. As soon as orders are received they should be acknowledged, so that customers may depend upon getting what they have ordered.

Every plant should be carefully wrapped. All flowering plants, with flowers that are easily bruised, should first receive a wrapping in tissue paper and then some heavier material to protect them from the cold and bruising or breaking while in transit. Cases should be lined with heavy building paper or several thicknesses of newspaper and every row of plants should be cleated in so that there will be no danger of the plants dislodging should the express company turn the cases upside down.

Easter Plants.

Once the Christmas holidays are over preparations for the next great event in the plantsman's year, Easter, must be attended to. The varying dates on which Easter falls must always be borne in mind, so that you may govern your crop accordingly. For the Easter holiday a number of different varieties of plants than those forced for the Christmas holidays will be used.

First and foremost are Easter lilies, either longiflorum or Harrisii. For pot plants I consider the 7-9-inch bulbs the best size. There is a difference of opinion how these should be grown, some contending that they should first be potted in 4 or 4½-inch pots and then shifted up into 6 or 7-inch as the plants come along. Others say that they should be potted in the pot in which they are to bloom. The only difference that I can see is a slight economy of space in their early stages. From my several years' experience in growing and handling these I see but little difference in the result when handled by careful growers. There is just one essential point to always bear in mind: From the time a lily starts growing it should never receive a check, for if it does, any germs of disease that are lying dormant are sure to develop. Nor can you gauge its date of flowering with the same degree of success as if it had not received a check.

There are a number of brands of Lilium longiflorum on the market but I do not think that there is any material difference between them. The main object is to have good, sound, well-ripened bulbs. Under the same conditions, longiflorum will come in if started from four to five weeks later than Harrisii. While the lily is the Easter flower par excellence, it is also the most expensive to grow and hardest for the store men to handle.

Other plants that will need immediate attention are hydrangeas, Crimson Rambler and hybrid perpetual roses. These should be brought in and started into growth in a moderate temperature, gradually increasing it, governed by the time at your disposal.

Azaleas that are to be held for Easter should be kept in a cool house, with an even temperature, free from drip or excessive moisture. Other varieties of plants such as metrosideros, lilacs, rhododendrons, deutzias, etc., will not need to be brought in before the last week in February or the first in March.

Among the soft-wooded plants the improved varieties of pelargoniums are going to take a prominent place as Easter plants. These if propagated during September and October, and kept growing along, will make fine, bushy plants in 5 or 6-inch pots, with from six to ten large trusses of flower, by the first of April. They are easily handled, very floriferous and find a ready sale, giving customers as good satisfaction as an azalea or a Crimson Rambler and will yield a better profit to the grower. Spiræa or astilbe is also a prominent Easter plant and is sold in large quantities. Dutch bulbs should not be lost sight of. Pans of hyacinths, tulips and narcissi, in their various varieties, are sold in large quantities and are easily brought in at the right time. Three weeks in a moderate temperature is all that is required to bring them to perfection. Lilies of the valley and forget-me-nots in pots and pans are also desirable. It will also be necessary to prepare a few foliage plants, such as Boston and Piersoni ferns, palms and rubbers, but let your main effort be to prepare a stock of good flowering plants for the Easter trade. Of all the holidays in the year, Easter is the one on which most flowering plants are used. Its associations are of a joyous nature and all people, be they rich or poor, high or low, are imbued with the happiness attending the occasion and want something bright and cheerful, in keeping with their feelings.

The same care in handling and delivering plants as mentioned for the Christmas trade will apply at all times. Easter lilies are very hard to handle without bruising. For shipping, the best method that we have found is to allow the plants to become somewhat dry, so that the flowers will be just a trifle wilty, and each individual flower and bud wrapped in cotton batting. The plants should be firmly staked and each row should be cleated into the cases and a top cleat nailed across the case just below the buds and each row of plants tied to this cleat. If this work is thoroughly done you will have no drawbacks or rebates to make for bruised flowers while in transit.

Prospects in Canada.

There are a number of plants that I have not mentioned which might be brought in for the holidays, such as freesias, ericas, ardisias, capsicums, bougainvillea, etc. You are all familiar with the handling of them and I do not need to go into details. The demand in your locality must govern you largely in what you grow. It is well, from year to year, to change the varieties that you are growing, dropping some that you find the demand decreasing on and adding others that are likely to create a demand. That the demand is increasing, and will continue to do so, is without a question of doubt. The time was when all our efforts were concentrated in endeavoring to have a sufficient supply of cut flowers to fill the demand, but gradually plants are superseding this demand and, while at holiday times there will always be a demand sufficient to take all the cut flowers that can be produced, the demand for both plants and cut flowers is not likely to be overdone for some time to come, for the growth of our country is such that her ultimate possibilities are greater and grander than all the European and American states combined.

VIOLETS.

[A paper by Wm. Fendley, of Brampton, read before the Canadian Horticultural Association at Ottawa, Ont., August 10.]

I was asked to open a discussion on the culture of violets. As I am here before you, I am in your hands—and in my few remarks, if I should overlook anything you would like to ask about, speak up, for this is the place for discussion, and I will answer any questions to the best of my ability.

I have been growing violets for the past ten years and I am learning their habits better every year. In the first place, I am sure that sand-rooted cuttings are the best, as you get young, sappy growth to start your plants from. I root them very slowly, taking runners from only the best plants. This applies to both single and double varieties, especially doubles. You should never take stock from poor plants. Take only the strongest runners. After the cuttings are well rooted, prick them off on a piece of bench, not too close together, so that they will not be crowded when planting-out time comes.

My method is to plant singles in the field in May and doubles in the beds where they are to stay for next season's crop, as I have found, to my sorrow, that the double violet is a very slow root actor. That is to say, roots that will throw blooms. It is not so with the singles. I think it is hard to kill them.

Violets want good drainage. I honestly believe there are more violets spoiled with overwatering than there are by going too dry. Never let your plants go to bed damp. Water only on bright days. Keep the house at 38 to 40 degrees if you want good color and plenty of fragrance. A good violet should have a stem twelve to fourteen inches long, with bloom not smaller than our half dollar. The stem should hold the bloom upright.

On the other hand, if you are going in for quantity, not quality, run your houses at 48 to 50 degrees and you will have plenty of nice foliage and pale blooms with weak stems. I plant doubles from nine to ten inches apart and singles ten to twelve inches apart, according to the size of plants when lifting from the field.

I have often been asked the question, what is a good cut for this house? For the month of February this year I cut 64,775 violets. I expect to have four times as many the coming season as I had this.

BOWLING PRIZES.

There is an embarrassment of riches in the bowling department for the St. Louis convention. Aside from the large number of prizes arranged for by the St. Louis committee, including the handsome silver loving cup offered by the Anheuser-Busch Co., Treasurer H. B. Beatty, of Oil City and Pittsburg, has offered a loving cup for the team contest and three handsome pieces of silver for the ladies.

W. F. Kasting has offered a splendid, massive solid silver loving cup as a perpetual challenge trophy. This is a most excellent idea, as the team winning it at the convention will doubtless feel called upon to defend it against all comers at any time of the year. Mr. Kasting is well known as never doing anything by halves and the trophy is naturally one of the handsomest for which florists' bowling teams have ever been privileged to compete. A picture of it appears in this issue.

The Kasting Challenge Championship Bowling Trophy.

The men's trophy offered by Mr. Beatty is a loving cup in sterling silver, standing about twenty-two inches high, with three handles. This divides the cup into three panels, handsomely ornamented. The third panel has the words "H. B. Beatty trophy, won by," with room left for the name of the winner. At the base of the cup are bowling balls and pins finished in black to contrast with the silver. The base is ebony.

The first prize for the ladies is a beautiful flower vase in sterling silver, about eighteen inches high. On one side is etched the words "St. Louis, 1904," with the figure of a woman about to roll a ball. On the other side of the vase are the words "H. B. Beatty trophy, won by," with a shield left for the name of the winner.

The ladies' second prize is a rich comport for fruit in sterling silver. It stands six inches high, the top being decorated with the etching of a woman about to roll a ball. Above are the words "H. B. Beatty trophy," underneath the words "Ladies' Prize." The base is decorated with two panels. A plain shield is then left for the name of the winner.

The consolation prize is a dainty vase in sterling silver that stands about ten inches high, the top and bottom being ornamented with a beautiful floral wreath. On the vase are very artistically etched the words "St. Louis, 1904, consolation prize." Below this two crossed pins and a ball underneath. On the other side are the words "H. B. Beatty trophy, won by," with a shield for the name of the winner.

FRENCH BULBS.

Now that the season has arrived when French-grown bulbs become a subject of general attention on the part of seedsmen, these notes will probably be read with interest.

Everybody knows that the French bulbs are especially adapted for forcing, as they have been grown in a warm climate. Yet it is principally during the autumn, winter, and spring months that attention is important. The bulbs planted in August flower in December, and continue to do so until the end of March without any other warmth than that of the sun. Though it is a fact that some cold days occur in winter-time (sometimes there is a strong, cold wind, called the mistral), yet we have many beautiful days which may compete with the finest summer days in England. Frost is nearly unknown. Thousands of people here have never seen other than artificial ice; natural ice of ¾-inch thickness only occurs in exceptional winters. Rarely does the temperature fall below freezing point.

During the warm days and the scanty rainfall of March, April, and May, the bulbs must be planted in such a manner that they can be easily watered. The watering is such an important matter that it affects the results of a year's work.

The bulbs are planted either in single or double rows right across the field; between every row (single or double) is a distance of eight inches. This space is used for a path, and for convenience when watering, and is a little hollowed.

The water coming from the hills is stored in small canals, from which many gardens obtain their supply. From the principal canal a branch runs to all the gardens of the same grower. One shallow path along all the rows of bulbs has a dyke across at every row. When the lock by which it is connected with the branch canal is opened, the water finds its way instantly along the first path. When this is full from end to end, the first little dyke is removed, and the water runs on into the second path. When this is full from end to end, the second little dyke is removed, then the water fills the third path, and so on.

This way of watering is very quick, though it calls for much attention. It

W. F. Kasting has offered a splendid, massive solid silver loving cup as a perpetual challenge trophy. This is a most excellent idea, as the team winning it at the convention will doubtless feel called upon to defend it against all comers at any time of the year. Mr. Kasting is well known as never doing anything by halves and the trophy is naturally one of the handsomest for which florists' bowling teams have ever been privileged to compete. A picture of it appears in this issue.

The Kasting Challenge Championship Bowling Trophy.

The men's trophy offered by Mr. Beatty is a loving cup in sterling silver, standing about twenty-two inches high, with three handles. This divides the cup into three panels, handsomely ornamented. The third panel has the words "H. B. Beatty trophy, won by," with room left for the name of the winner. At the base of the cup are bowling balls and pins finished in black to contrast with the silver. The base is ebony.

The first prize for the ladies is a beautiful flower vase in sterling silver, about eighteen inches high. On one side is etched the words "St. Louis, 1904," with the figure of a woman about to roll a ball. On the other side of the vase are the words "H. B. Beatty trophy, won by," with a shield left for the name of the winner.

The ladies' second prize is a rich comport for fruit in sterling silver. It stands six inches high, the top being decorated with the etching of a woman about to roll a ball. Above are the words "H. B. Beatty trophy," underneath the words "Ladies' Prize." The base is decorated with two panels. A plain shield is then left for the name of the winner.

The consolation prize is a dainty vase in sterling silver that stands about ten inches high, the top and bottom being ornamented with a beautiful floral wreath. On the vase are very artistically etched the words "St. Louis, 1904, consolation prize." Below this two crossed pins and a ball underneath. On the other side are the words "H. B. Beatty trophy, won by," with a shield for the name of the winner.

FRENCH BULBS.

Now that the season has arrived when French-grown bulbs become a subject of general attention on the part of seeds men, these notes will probably be read with interest.

Everybody knows that the French bulbs are especially adapted for forcing, as they have been grown in a warm climate. Yet it is principally during the autumn, winter, and spring months that attention is important. The bulbs planted in August flower in December, and continue to do so until the end of March without any other warmth than that of the sun. Though it is a fact that some cold days occur in winter-time (sometimes there is a strong, cold wind, called the mistral), yet we have many beautiful days which may compete with the finest summer days in England. Frost is nearly unknown. Thousands of people here have never seen other than artificial ice; natural ice of ¾-inch thickness only occurs in exceptional winters. Rarely does the temperature fall below freezing point.

During the warm days and the scanty rainfall of March, April, and May, the bulbs must be planted in such a manner that they can be easily watered. The watering is such an important matter that it affects the results of a year's work.

The bulbs are planted either in single or double rows right across the field; between every row (single or double) is a distance of eight inches. This space is used for a path, and for convenience when watering, and is a little hollowed.

The water coming from the hills is stored in small canals, from which many gardens obtain their supply. From the principal canal a branch runs to all the gardens of the same grower. One shallow path along all the rows of bulbs has a dyke across at every row. When the lock by which it is connected with the branch canal is opened, the water finds its way instantly along the first path. When this is full from end to end, the first little dyke is removed, and the water runs on into the second path. When this is full from end to end, the second little dyke is removed, then the water fills the third path, and so on.

This way of watering is very quick, though it calls for much attention. I has the advantage that no leaves get wet. Where the gardens have no main canal, they have a water-pit of ten, fifteen or more metres deep (a metre is a little over a yard). A horse pumps up the water. Besides these gardens, there are others which cannot be watered at all, but depend entirely on the rainfall.

Though here again we have a bulb-growing district, the ground is not so flat as in Holland. Many gardens, however, are level (all these can be watered), others are on the slopes. Even the sides of the hills are covered with gardens. Of these the people have made the best they could. They built walls and leveled the soil in such a manner that the hillside is transformed into terraces. To bring up the water high enough for these is impossible, but they catch all the rain and prevent it from running away.

All gardens which depend on the rainfall for their supply of water are called "campagne." In April and May rain falls but seldom, and sometimes these gardens suffer much from want of water. The warmth of the sun makes the soil dry and very hard, and the plants do not grow. Generally vines are planted which resist much drought, though the bulbs grow there very well, if it rains at the right time; if it does not they remain small. However, many growers consider these small bulbs just as good as the bigger ones from the "gardens." The bulb from the latter retains a good deal of water, and is not as firm and resistant as a bulb from the "campagne."

A bulb from this locality has been grown under difficulties, and has, as regards water, never known what plenty means, and has never been able to store so much water, for nearly all the water taken up by the roots has evaporated from the leaves. A bulb from the "gardens" however, can always store more water, and never suffer. The difference between these two is that a bulb from the "campagne" of 12 cent. circumference has more substance than one from the "gardens" of 12 cent. Now suppose that both under the same circumstances do the same work of producing a flower when forced. From which are you likely to have the best results? Is the grower right when he says that a bulb of 11 cent. from the "campagne" has the same vigor as one of 12 cent. from the "gardens"? If there was ever a deficiency of bulbs of a certain size, the "campagne" bulbs of 1 cent. less circumference would surely prove good substitutes. But if rain falls at the proper time the bulbs from the "campagne" may attain to the same dimensions.

This year we had the rain just at the critical moment, and we may expect a moderately good crop. Up to the time of writing no prices had been officially fixed, though we expect that they will be shortly. The general opinion is that the prices will be (at the beginning of the trade at any rate) such that bargains will be rare. For the main crop, however, there will be plenty of good bulbs, and there is a chance that prices may drop later on.

CANADIAN FLORISTS' MEET.

The seventh annual convention of the Canadian Horticultural Association was opened in Goldsmith's Hall, Ottawa, Ont., on Tuesday, August 9. There was a good attendance and much interest was manifest from the start.

The first session was called to order promptly on time by President E. I. Mepsted. The mayor of Ottawa was then introduced and delivered a cordial address of welcome, stating that of the many conventions which have met in Ottawa during his term of office, there was none he took more personal pleasure in greeting. The response was made by P. McKenna, of Montreal, whose address was a credit to the craft from a point of oratory.

The next order of business was the presentation of President Mepsted's annual address, which was later very freely commented on. His suggestions with regard to the tariff and concerning the attempts to establish a Canadian trade paper, brought out a very interesting discussion and were referred to a committee for report. The secretary's report was presented and showed the association to be in a very healthy and progressive condition. The treasurer reported an encouraging balance in the treasury.

O. G. Johnston, Kingston, read a paper on the greenhouses which an ordinary florist should build and provoked a great deal of merriment as well as offering some good, practical suggestions.

The evening session was opened by a paper by Prof. W. T. Macoun, the horticulturist at Experimental Farm, whose subject was "Hardy Perennials Suitable for Florists' Use." He dealt with the 100 best hardy varieties and his remarks were both very interesting and highly instructive. A discussion on the best fuel for greenhouse heating was led by C. Scrim, of Ottawa, and, while full of instruction, showed much difference of opinion, as the difference in locality is shown in climate and cost of fuel. Soft coal screenings proved to be the favorite fuel.

At this session it was decided to hold the eighth convention at Montreal next year, an invitation having been received from the secretary of the Montreal Florists' Club.

On Wednesday papers were read by A. C. Wilshire, Wm. Gammage and Wm. Fendley. They were much enjoyed and provoked lively debate on each subject. The election of officers Wednesday evening resulted as follows: President, George Robinson, Montreal; first vice-president, J. Suckling, Truro, N. S.; second vice-president, O. G. Johnston, Kingston; members executive committee, John Walsh, Montreal; A. Pinoteau, Montreal; A. Dunardel, Toronto. Secretary and treasurer as before.

The trade exhibition was above the average. The judges made awards as follows: A diploma to Campbell Bros., of Simcoe, for gladioli; certificate of merit to D. J. Sinclair, Toronto, for florists' supplies; to the Experimental Farm for perennials; to John Scott, Brooklyn, for Nephrolepis Scottii. Other exhibits of note were those of J. Gammage & Sons, London, plants; Grobba & Wandry, Mimico, plants; Hall & Robinson, Montreal; C. Scrim, Ottawa, and Graham Bros., ferns; Foster Pottery Co., Hamilton, pots; F. Browne, Barrie, sweet peas.

The entertainment of the visitors by the Ottawa florists is on an elaborate scale and very hearty.

President's Address.

President Mepsted spoke in part, as follows:

It is pleasant to compare the meeting here today with the one held in this hall five years ago. What an advance we have made in membership! For a year or two it was up-hill work, but there were some members plodded on and the result is that we are now on a sound, successful basis, growing each year in membership and usefulness. Take our visit to Toronto last year, few of us would care to lose the chance of seeing the Dale Estate as we did in all stages of building under the King Construction Co., and the same may apply to all cities in a more or less degree that we visit. Again, compare our really good trade exhibit of today with that of five years ago: Then two exhibits, now a very fair number. There is a feeling, perhaps, that it does not pay, but if not directly I think it does indirectly and will do so more year by year.

All this is a preliminary to my saying that although we are flourishing, we must not become too confident and therefore careless. There is great room for growth yet, both in membership and usefulness. The prosperity of the association is to a great degree influenced by its membership. In numbers is strength. All of us must realize that it is our duty to the C. H. A. to do our utmost to bring new members to our convention and once we have them we must do our best to keep them. When we become members we should be considered such until we withdraw. If we miss a convention, which often means not paying our dues, we should not be dropped by our officers, but we should receive a reminder and many of us would quickly realize our carelessness and be prompt to send our dues and glad to feel that we were yet a member. There should be a strong effort made to get more gardeners to join. Their presence and their knowledge is wanted to strengthen us. The same may be said of other branches.

We are now going the rounds of the larger cities a second time with our conventions and in the near future I think an effort should be made to see if our annual conventions could not be held at some of the smaller cities. Some of these would be interesting to visit and plenty large enough to accommodate a convention of our numbers. Horticulture in them, I have no doubt, would receive a stimulus in having us visit them. In conventions like ours there must always be a certain amount of play or social enjoyment. Man is made for it and it is health-giving, to the brain as well as the body. In these cities there are one or two good florists wishing they could have us. To these it would be a great injustice to expect the entertainment we are used to in much larger and wealthier cities, but I have an idea that it could be arranged so that no over pride in their city or reflection on their hospitality would be felt. If this could be done I think it would be good for the association and for horticulture generally.

I must congratulate the members of the trade on the prosperous year just passed. Judging from reports, all branches of the business have had a good year, notwithstanding the severe handicap imposed by the unusually cold winter which meant largely increased fuel bills. Prices to the grower have been good and the public has been willing to pay good prices for good flowers. This last is particularly gratifying, as it shows our business is gradually getting on a higher plane.

The plant trade has made rapid strides, the only drawback being the want of uniform prices. There is no reason why there should not be; there are not so many of us in most cities to make it difficult. The country at present is not over-producing and for the last two or three years we have found that the supply was hardly up to the demand. Could this be arranged, it would benefit all.

The old subject of duty on azaleas and other plants is still open to our discussion. I am afraid we shall find, on hearing the reports, that our case is still in abeyance. It looks as if the Minister considers it too small a matter to bother with; therefore, now is the time for the C. H. A. by persistently advocating our claims to convince the Minister that it is of great consequence to us. There was an attempt made by a member of the trade to get the duty taken off new introductions in the way of carnations, etc., from the States. This, as they are a benefit to our country and cannot be procured in any other way, is a just demand. I have not heard how successful he was.

I am glad to say the relations between employer and employe are of a satisfactory nature but there seems to be a scarcity of good plantsmen, which is a decided disadvantage. I think the employer is somewhat to blame for this. All other businesses make their skilled help from the boys. Why should not we do so? In some establishments I have seen it done most successfully. I do not know of any business that furnishes so good a field for employment as the florists' trade.

At the present day, in the horticultural world, the most noticeable subject is the growing use and popularity of hardy plants and flowers. It is a subject the commercial florist has to interest himself in and with our visit to the Experimental Farm and Mr. Macoun's paper should lead to discussion that will be a profit to all.

The greatest good that we get from attending these sessions is from a general discussion of the various subjects as they come up, therefore I hope that when this convention closes there will not be one member who has not risen in session and spoken on some subject. All are not orators, and the silent one often knows a lot. We want to share that knowledge and to express our ideas here is only like talking to a family gathering.

FUMIGATING.

I have a house of asters in which the thrips are doing considerable damage. As ordinary means have proved unavailing, would it be safe to fumigate with hydrocyanic acid gas? In a recent article on the use of this fumigant you said that the ventilators should be opened from the outside. How? A. A. W.

It would be very risky to try the gas on a houseful of asters in bloom. In quantities strong enough to kill thrips, it would be very likely to kill the plants as well. In regard to raising ventilators to let gas escape, two or thre- should be arranged so that they may be opened with a rope from the outside. Then, after one-half hour has elapsed, the house may be entered and the others opened in the usual way. It is much more efficient to use a strong gas for a short time than a weaker one for a long time. In most cases, it is not at all advisable to let the gas stay in the house over night. E. F. SMITH.

ASTERS AND BOSTONS.

The accompanying illustration is reproduced from a photograph taken at the establishment of Davis Bros., Geneva, Ill., July 10. These gentlemen are known as specialists on the Boston fern but the picture, which shows only about one-fourth of their field of 30,000 plants, proves that their influence on the aster market in Chicago is not small. They state, however, that the prospects are not so good as they might be because of the effect of the drouth on the later varieties. The early sorts are doing all right but over 10,000 plants of later varieties were a total loss because of dry weather.

It has often been predicted that there would be an oversupply of Boston ferns, but Davis Bros. report the demand as good as ever. Last year they grew 50,000 in their two places, at Geneva and at Morrison, Ill., and might have sold more.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The cut flower market is still quiet; in fact, last week was rather more dull that its predecessors, the shipping demand on Thursday being reported as the lightest at any time this season. Good roses continue to be actively sought. The cuts of Beauty are showing something of an increase and the length of stem is also gaining and most wants in this department can now be supplied. The work of thrips is apparent. There are few Brides or Bridesmaids with any size or length of stem. Where a retailer has an order which calls for good work he has difficulty in obtaining the material, for all the wholesale houses are holding on to what good roses they get for the benefit of their out-of-town customers. There are plenty of Liberty with short stems. Few Kaiserins are seen and they bring good prices. There are few indoor carnations but the receipts of outdoor flowers are increasing and the quality is fully up to the average for this class of stock.

The aster continues to be the dominant flower. All colors are now available in practically all grades, although the best stock is not plentiful. There are large quantities of the low grades which are difficult to move at any price. Stemrot and all the other ills the aster is heir to are reducing the cuts. Sweet peas are still abundant, but the quality is deteriorating. Few lilies are offered other than auratums, which are not bringing fancy figures.

Many of the retailers are using water lilies for their window decorations. Gladioli are also largely used, for they can be had at very reasonable prices and make a good show. Rudbeckias are seen everywhere. There are all kinds of green goods in plenty and prices are very low.

To St. Louis.

The Chicago Florists' Club will leave for St. Louis at 11 a. m., Monday, August 15, on the Wabash, the depot foot of Dearborn street. A round trip rate of $8 has been obtained, tickets good for ten days. There will be parlor cars on the train, for which the usual extra charge of $1 will be made. All those who are going should notify P. J. Hauswirth, either by phone or postal card, in order that the committee may make arrangements for the accommodation of all. There will be a good crowd.

Various Notes.

The Chicago daily papers are giving considerable space to the action of Peter Reinberg and Nicholas Mann in providing a site and the nucleus for the building fund of a new Catholic church at Summerdale, near the greenhouses. The following is from the Inter Ocean:

Alderman Peter Reinberg, known as the "carnation king," told "Nick" Mann, his neighbor, a few months ago that he would give $1,000 in cash for every fifty-foot lot Mann would give for a new Catholic Church in Summerdale. Mann thought 150 feet would be enough. Alderman Reinberg induced him to raise it to 250 feet, and has given $5,000 toward the building. Architects are at work on the plans of the church. The first affair of several to be arranged for the building fund of the new church took place Wednesday afternoon and evening. It was a lawn fete at Alderman Reinberg's residence, 3468 North Robey street.

The Geo. Wittbold Co. will open a new and handsomely fitted up retail store at 803 Dempster street, Evanston, with Wm. Wadsworth in charge. They are remodeling their Buckingham place retail store, making it thoroughly modern in every respect. Just at present they are badly torn up there.

Weiland & Risch have practically completed their planting. They are already getting a nice cut from the young Beauty plants.

A. Dietsch is enjoying exceptionally good health this summer. Young Mr. Dietsch will represent the firm at St. Louis next week.

Wietor Bros. are getting some good long-stemmed Beauties, but the weather is still too hot for large buds.

C. M. Dickinson has been confined to his home again this week, after being down town only a couple of times since the trouble with his throat began. W. E. Lynch is again on duty after two weeks of vacation in Michigan.

Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Bassett are at Lake Geneva for a week.

Oscar Friedman has all arrangements completed for opening a new store at Thirty-fifth street and Michigan avenue.

Mrs. A. M. Schafer is sending Percy Jones a nice cut of Kaiserins.

D. W. Brant is cutting indoor-grown asters that rival the early mums. The plants were grown in the propagating house after the young stock was out of the way and a good part of the crop has brought $8 per 100.

Joe Craig lost his eldest son, John, aged 19, on August 6. The funeral was held on Tuesday.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The weather here is very cool. The thermometer last week was down to 60 degrees, and, according to the daily press, we were the coolest city on the map. Just such weather is promised for convention week.

Business is still slow in all branches and there is not much to report this week, as we are all too busy with convention work. There seems to be plenty of cut stock in all the wholesale houses. Among the roses Kaiserins are about the best that come in; also a few good Carnots are seen. Brides and Maids are of poor quality. With so little going on it is hard to dispose of them at any price and only the extra choice bring $4 to $5 per 100. Good Beauties are hard to find. Those that come in are very poor. Some extra good white carnations are seen, but the colored stock is of very poor quality. The price per 100 is 75 cents to $2. Asters are a great glut. These are selling from $2 to $6 per 1,000 in mixed colors. W. F. Kasting, of Buffalo, is consigning a big lot to this market, which are of fine quality. Sweet peas had a good season, but are about over. The average price for them was fairly good. Gladioli, too, are a drug. Many of them are sold cheap for window decorations. All other outdoor stock is selling slowly. Good valley and smilax are still to be had.

Convention Notes.

Nothing but convention is heard among the craft and the reports from the different chairmen at a recent meeting are as follows:

Fred Ammann says that his committee has everything complete. This committee will receive the visiting S. A. F. delegates at the Union Station from Monday morning to Tuesday noon to escort them to their hotels, so look out for reception committee badges when you arrive.

The writer has charge of the President's reception and has a big surprise in store. Those who fail to attend will miss a great treat.

Fred C. Weber and his committee, assisted by the Ladies' Bowling Club, have completed all arrangements to take care of all the visiting ladies on Wednesday, the day set aside for them. This will be one of the features of the meeting.

Carl Beyer and Robert Tesson, chairmen of the bowling and shooting committees, are hard at work at this writing, completing all their arrangements, which they say will eclipse any attempt at former meetings.

Henry Ostertag's decorating committee will be at work by the end of this week, decorating both halls. This committee are all experts at the art of decorating and something fine may be expected.

Superintendent Kuehn and his assistant, Mr. Meinhardt, are spending most of their time at the exhibition hall, receiving exhibition goods. Everything is in readiness for the exhibitors and most of them have sent word that they would be here on Saturday to begin work on their exhibits.

Secretary Stewart, of the S. A. F., in a letter writes that he will be here on Sunday night and will be at the convention hall early Monday morning.

The finance committee, of which Otto Koenig is chairman, has completed its work. They report that they have plenty of funds on hand for all expenses, which is a very important matter.

Frank Ellis is working overtime with his hotel committee, but they are equal to the task and all applications for rooms are promptly complied with. As Mr. Ellis says, "They can't come too fast for us."

The souvenir book is out and now in the hands of the S. A. F. members. If anyone is overlooked, he should advise J. J. Beneke, 1220 Olive street.

BUFFALO.

There is nothing in the business here worthy of much moment, yet it is fully equal to, perhaps a little ahead of, corresponding periods of other years. Our climate is so salubrious, enjoyable and invigorating that everyone feels good. No heat prostrations and no mosquitoes.

John Esler, of Saddle River, N. J., was telling me, in a letter last week, that he had a Buffalo friend staying with him over night recently. On inquiring how he slept, the Buffalo man said: "Nicely, but what a lot of automobiles you have here. They were passing all night." John replied, "My dear sir, they were not automobiles; they were mosquitoes."

Carnations are at the very lowest point. It is just as well; it gives the public a rest. Asters are in abundance. Sweet peas are still fine and in good demand, and what glorious shades of color we have in them now! I suppose we owe this largely to Mr. Eckford, whom the writer, then a little boy of 10 or 12 years, knew very well, when Mr. Eckford was a fine, broad-shouldered young man, gardener to a Dr. Martin, a pioneer in dentistry, at a pretty place called Purbrook, in the county of Hants. Dr. Martin would look in your mouth for $5, pull a tooth for $10, or supply an artificial one for $50, or a whole set for $1,000. No wonder he could keep a first-class gardener. But excuse my being reminiscent; 'tis but a falling of the sunset of life.

There are so few gladioli grown locally that we are never overdone. A flower that is most useful now is the lancifolium lily. The auratum is used in large designs, where taste and smell are not too fastidious, but the album and roseum are beautiful anywhere you put them. Louis H. Neubeck, in his most attractive place, has a fine show of these lilies.

There is not much building going on, but a good deal of fixing up. S. A. Anderson is making great changes in his admirably located store, which, when completed, is expected to be "a gem of purest ray serene." H. Keitsch & Son are having a new store especially fixed and adapted for their business.

Among the visitors of recent date who favored us with a call was Mr. Kelsey, of South Orange, importer of trees and shrubs. Mr. Kelsey spent last summer in Europe, comparing the landscape art of England and the continent with that of the United States and it is inspiring to hear him say that our native but traveled artists will evolve a style embracing the best of European, yet distinctive and superior to any. This is most joyful to hear and it means the employment of thousands of men of skill as well as labor, the exercise of art and the beautifying of our country. How can a man whom fortune has favored, spend his wealth better than by turning the wilderness into a place of beauty? Where there was one such place twenty-five years ago, there are today 100 and they are ever on the increase. Fifty acres of beautiful grounds is a better educator than the study of the dead languages.

Mr. Creighton, of the Henry Dreer Co., called on his passage to the Mississippi, also namesake Scott, of Chicago, who has just finished seeing that the firm's Bermuda lilies were properly dug and packed.

Our club had a fairly well attended meeting last week. Our delegation will leave for St. Louis on the Wabash, Monday, at 1:30 p. m., arriving in St. Louis about 8 a. m. Tuesday. We are trying hard to get a bowling team together but, if we succeed, will scarcely be a competitor. It will be made up of "has beens" and "never wases." As the writer has often said, it's the duty of all florists who possibly can to attend these national conventions. You do not realize, many of you, how much our good society has done for you all, and if attendance demands self-sacrifice you could not exercise it at a better time. The man who says "The S. A. F. don't do me any good" is blind, ignorant and selfish. He has been a beneficiary of its usefulness and good work for a number of years, but too bigoted to see the truth. Then there's the mammoth exposition. If you only spend two or three hours within its gates, as the writer expects to, it's a great satisfaction in years to come to be able to say, "Oh, yes, I saw the St. Louis Fair." However, big as it is, I consider it very secondary to attending out national convention, reviving old acquaintances and making new ones.

The H. A. Meldrum Co. has liberally added more dollars to their chrysanthemum exhibition and the premium list has been published and mailed by Manager Keitsch to all likely exhibitors.

The Kasting Cup.

Just had a look at the Kasting champion challenge cup. It is a beauty! It is a startler! It is a darling! The finest thing we have ever seen, worthy of the most fierce fight. W. S.

MEDINA, O.—Hammerschmidt & Clark are completing one of the best built greenhouses in Ohio, one room 36x27 and three rooms 10x36. Carnations in the field are fine and housing under way.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Conditions remain much the same as in our last report and prices are not greatly changed. Good roses continue scarce. Beauties bring up to $20 per 100 and top price on Kaiserins is $8. Brides and Bridesmaids are small, $2 to $3 being about the average. Good outdoor carnations continue to sell at $2. The supply of indoor ones is about over. Asters are more abundant, but clear out well, especially the white varieties, at 75 cents. Gladioli are good, at $2 to $6. Sweet peas are scarce for good quality, of which many more could be sold. Valley sells well, Fine quality, such as Waban Conservatories send in, brings up to $6. The principal scarcity in the market continues to be in white flowers.

Lilium Philippense.

The most remarkable exhibit at Horticultural Hall on August 6 was a display of the beautiful Lilium Philippense (Farquhar's Christmas lily) from R. & J. Farquhar & Co. This lily was first introduced by Wallis and forwarded by him to Veitch & Sons, of London, in 1873. It is described in the Botanical Magazine, No. 6250. It is not now catalogued by any European firm. Messrs. Farquhar received a few small bulbs last November in a very dried up condition. These bulbs were placed in a frame and when lifted for forcing were frozen solidly. After proving the merits of the lily, a traveler was dispatched for a larger supply. These arrived on May 29 and were benched the following day. As the bulbs are very small for so superb a lily, they were planted in benches in a warm, moist house, two inches between the bulbs and four inches between the rows. The first buds showed on July 1 and a number of flowers were cut on July 30. Bulbs no larger than filberts flower and Messrs. Farquhar have quantities of seedlings which they say will flower in from six to nine months from sowing.

Lilium Philippense is a native of the island of Benguetense, Philippines, growing at an elevation of about 10,000 feet. The rainfall in June there is thirty inches. The stems are slender but sufficiently strong to support the large, pure white, trumpet-shaped flowers, which are ten inches in length. The odor is very pleasant, resembling that of Brugmansia suaveolens. From one to three flowers were carried on the stems exhibited, which were from nine to twenty-four inches high. The foliage is narrow, leaves loosely scattered down the stem, not unlike that of Dracæna indivisa. The plant is much more graceful than Lilium Harrisii or L. longiflorum and its remarkable ease of propagation by seeds or scales will, we venture to say, in time revolutionize the lily industry. This is the most remarkable novelty shown before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society for years and we believe the unanimous bestowal of the society's highest award, a gold medal, was well deserved. Messrs. Farquhar have about 10,000 bulbs of this lily at present. It will be introduced not later than 1905.

Weekly Exhibition.

Perennial phloxes made a large display but the trusses were hardly so good as usual. For twelve named varieties prizes went to Blue Hill Nurseries, W. Whitman, T. C. Thurlow and Geo. Hollis in order named. Some fine seedlings were shown by Blue Hill Nurseries, honorable mention being given to Daybreak and a fine dark red variety. F. L. Ames estate, W. N. Craig, gardener, received a cultural certificate for display of phloxes, also honorable mention for seedling No. 3. The same exhibitor received a certificate of merit for Rehmannia angulata, a new hardy herbaceous perennial from central China, with large gloxinia-like, rosy purple flowers. Messrs. Heurlin, McLaren, Thurlow, Mrs. E. M. Gill and Mrs. J. B. Lawrence all made fine displays of phlox, the latter lady also staging thirty varieties of sweet peas. W. Whitman made a large general display. Robert Cameron received a silver medal for a beautifully flowered specimen of Pancratium oyatum. Peter Cairns showed Strelitzia Reginæ and Monstera deliciosa, and F. S. Davis a new white dolichos from Japan.

There was a large display in the class for forty native plants, prizes going, in order named, to Mrs. Arthur Clark, Miss Shattuck, Mrs. R. L. Mann, The Misses Doran and Miss K. Buitta. Vegetables and fruits made an interesting display and about 100 varieties of fungi were staged.

Various Notes.

Francis Canning, in charge of the horticultural department of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, at Amherst, Mass., accompanied by Mrs. Canning, has been spending a few days in Boston and vicinity, looking over a number of the leading establishments.

Duncan Finlayson left for Washington on August 6 and will later go to St. Louis to take in the World's Fair and other sights.

The executive committee of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club met on August 8, at the office of W. J. Stewart, to select a date for the club excursion and make plans for fall work.

Hitchings & Co. have recently received contracts to build greenhouses for R. M. Saltonstall, in Brookline, and C. R. Talbet, Chestnut Hill. They report a busy season.

Carnations are being busily housed these days at almost every place visited. Plants look well, being of good average size.

The visit of the G. A. R. and decorations for the various posts, as well as social gatherings, is expected to give some stimulus to trade next week.

At South Lancaster.

A visit to South Lancaster, where are located some of the finest private estates in Massachusetts, is always full of interest to either private or commercial growers. A ten-minutes' run on the electrics from Clinton station drops us at the greenhouses of E. V. R. Thayer, where E. O. Orpet has charge. Orchids are a special feature here and are well done. Seedling raising is more successfully carried out than elsewhere in America, particularly among cattleyas. Numerous gold and silver medals and other awards have been given to these at the Boston shows. Many hundreds of seedlings, representing scores of distinct crosses, are to be noted here, plants varying in size from microscopic ones to big specimens in tubs. All are in luxuriant health. Odontoglossums are classed as difficult orchids to handle, but for the past few seasons Mr. Orpet has had signal success in their culture. His finest plants are in 8-inch pots or pans and specimens of O. crispum carried spikes three feet long last spring. During the winter months these plants are given a moderately warm, sunny house, and a north house during the warm months. Good batches of dendrobiums, cœlogynes and cypripediums, chiefly of the yellow insigne type, were noted. All orchids here are grown in pure osmunda fibre; no leaf-mold is now used, it having been tried and abandoned. The Cookson formula is successfully used as a stimulant for all orchids.

In the fruit houses grapes and nectarines were carrying good crops. Melons are grown in several divisions, Eureka, Emerald Gem and Outrement Beauty being the favorites. Carnations just housed were strong and vigorous, Enchantress, Flamingo, Queen and Lawson being most largely grown. A batch of Campanula isophylla alba in bloom in one of the houses indicated the value of this half hardy perennial for the florists' trade. A large, new, old-fashioned flower garden has just been established here and Mr. Orpet has done lots of planting the past season.

A. P. Meredith presides over the gardens of Nathaniel Thayer. He had been very busy planting until June, several thousand hybrid rhododendrons being included. These will eventually be a fine feature along the new waterways being developed on this fine estate. In the greenhouses stock looked well. The large rose house contained a fine lot of stock, Beauties being especially good. An additional house is devoted to Beauties for summer flowering and some fine flowers are now being cut. A house of cattleyas contained a lot of strong plants beginning to bristle with sheathes. A small batch of newly imported Odontoglossum crispum was a starter in the culture of this queen of orchids. Chrysanthemums, both grown to single stems and specimens in pots; cyclamens, Gloire de Lorraine begonia, gardenias, etc., all looked well. Melons filled four divisions and carried fine crops. English varieties only are grown, Windsor Castle seeming to suit Mr. Meredith as well as any.

William Anderson has a fine range of glass on the Bayard Thayer estate and we found his stock in fine condition. Roses are largely grown here, Beauty, Liberty, Bride and Bridesmaid being the favorites. The first named were particularly robust. In the carnation house, Governor Wolcott and Enchantress are the two favorite varieties. Mr. Anderson says Wolcott is very satisfactory as a winter bloomer, splitting a little in spring. A house 20x80 is devoted to peaches and nectarines. The first division had been cleared, but the late one carried a splendid crop of handsome fruit. A similar sized house is filled with grapes. These also carried a good crop of fruit, berries and bunches being over the average. Gros Colman, Muscat of Alexandria, Black Hamburg, Lady Downe's Seedling and Barbarossa were fine. A large frame of cyclamens were noted in fine condition. The cattleya house contains some superb specimens. Mr. Anderson thinks the addition of a little sphagnum to the fern fibre gives added vigor to his plants. A pond of choice nymphæas and other aquatics was in itself worthy of a visit. Around the new mansion recently erected on a high eminence, many thousands of trees and shrubs have recently been planted and vistas cut through the extensive woods to open up choice scenery. This estate promises, when developed, to be second to none in the state.

At John E. Thayer's we found Mr. Clarke as busy as ever making improvements. In the houses chrysanthemums were good. Preparations were being made to house carnations, which looked well in the field. Gloire de Lorraine begonia is something Mr. Clarke always does well and a bench of this looked very thrifty. Orchids are not much grown here, but calanthes have recently come into favor. Some large specimens of Nephrolepis Piersoni were exceedingly well grown. Outdoors the large kitchen garden looked trim and crops luxuriant. A new flower garden is an interesting feature and many fine specimens of trees and shrubs are dotted about the lawns and grounds.

W. N. CRAIG.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Prices have a downward tendency, when there is any tendency at all. The amount of stock arriving is in advance of other years, but a microscope is necessary to find any quality in the most of it. Gladioli are everywhere. There seems to be no limit to them, nor bottom to their value, while the creation of a demand is so remote that one could safely offer a large reward for its detection. But "it's a long lane that has no turn," and the coming fall and winter will be the best the florists of this country have enjoyed in a generation.

Various Notes.

Mr. Reed, of Reed & Keller, is off for St. Louis this week to arrange his display. He has one of the best locations in the big hall and a great collection of novelties and inventions in the supply line.

Henry Rudolph, the primrose specialist, of Caldwell, N. J., was in town last week. He is doing considerable rebuilding this season. Jos. Fenrich handles his output in New York.

Frank Millang has postponed his visit to his ranch in Oregon until next summer, so as to see the big exposition at Portland at the same time.

Charles and August Millang are having their summer vacations at Bayside, L. I., as usual.

Wholesalers have a grievance in the holding and destruction of boxes by the retailers. Hundreds are lost every month. Many are not seen for a year and the result will have to be a cheap box which can be thrown way. In England, at Covent Garden, the boxes are always charged for.

William Hackland, of the New York Cut Flower Co., leaves August 15 for a two weeks' vacation in the Adirondacks.

John Nash, of Moore, Hentz & Nash, is spending three weeks with his family at Highland Mills, N. Y.

Young & Nugent are making extensive improvements in their store, putting in a new front, changing and refitting the office and preparing for big fall and winter business.

The Hinode Floral Co.'s new greenhouses are rapidly approaching completion. They are preparing for an immense lily demand and their constantly renewed stock of dwarf Japanese trees has grown constantly in popularity.

N. LeCakes is well pleased with his removal of headquarters to Twenty-eighth street.

Lion & Wertheimer will be represented at the convention, not only by a fine exhibit, but several members of the firm will be in attendance.

Alex. McConnell has had a busy week with weddings and funeral designs, some of the latter being of especial beauty. For the obsequies of W. L. Browning, head of the firm of Browning, King & Co., a design of sago leaves and orchids and an immense cross of lilies seven feet in height and a six-foot wreath were specially commendable. The Bayne-Johnson wedding decorations at Grace church received much favorable comment. The bride's bouquet of white orchids and valley with garlands of stephanotis was beautiful and unique, and the palm display in keeping with the firm's thirty-two years of metropolitan reputation.

Alex. McConnell has a fine assortment of evergreens at his nursery in New Rochelle and some grand stock, at the city store, of large Hydrangea Hortensia in full bloom. In the greenhouses are large imported orange trees from Paris, tub grown and full fruit, the largest ever brought to this country.

Julius Roehrs has started on his annual tour in Europe, which will probably extend into October. In his absence his establishment at Rutherford is in good hands, Julius, Jr., superintending the business.

Albert Wadley started a week ago for California in greatly improved health and will spend several weeks on the coast.

Geo. M. Geraghty has just passed through a three weeks' illness with appendicitis and will recuperate at Rockaway, where he has been camping for the summer.

John Scott has a beautiful exhibit of his Scottii ready for shipment to the convention and will personally superintend the exhibition. The fern is popular with all the large growers in and around New York and the retailers have placed orders for it in large quantities for October delivery. Mr. Dryer has a house of it that looks grand and Chas. Zeller, David Mellis and all the fern growers of Flatbush seem to think it is the commercial fern par excellence.

The New York convention entry will be somewhat short of anticipated numbers as many exhibitors have gone to St. Louis in advance to install their displays. Nevertheless a goodly representation will be on hand on Sunday morning, and with the Baltimore and Washington delegations joining us, there will be the usual merry party that always characterizes the union of these fraternal organizations. The invitation of the Washington florists for 1905 receives the endorsement of the New Yorkers to a man.

John J. Esler, the hail man, is one of the advance guard from the east. He is investigating the Pike, that he may advise the young conventionists of dangers in time for safety.

John H. Taylor, of Bayside, was married July 28 to Miss Susan S. Stowe, at Flushing, N. Y. Mr. Taylor is popular in the trade and his reputation as a rose grower is national, so there is no limit to the congratulations.

A more liberal body of men than the New York wholesalers would be hard to find, always generous and considerate. They have been especially so this season in granting vacations to their employees, so that all have been fully refreshed for the coming season, which, based on the law of averages, and after the dullest summer ever known, should be the greatest fall and winter in the cut flower business in the decade.

George Cotsonas & Co., the green goods men, now at 53 West Twenty-eighth street, will move October 1 to their new store, 45 West Twenty-ninth street.

Mrs. Samuel Henshaw is visiting this summer at her old home in England, while her youthful spouse is gardening at his summer home in New Brighton and giving no more evidence of his seventy or more years of devotion to horticulture than a boy of twenty.

Sigmund Geller has some fine novelties in the supply line among his personal European selections this season. He reports trade opening excellently for fall and will be too busy to make his annual visit and exhibit at the S. A. F. convention.

Hanfling & Kleppner, the florists' supply men, 114 West Twenty-eighth street, will have a nice exhibit of their manufactures at the St. Louis convention. They have some fine basket specialties.

A. T. Boddington or Mr. Begbie will be at St. Louis in charge of that firm's exhibits of bulbs.

Slinn & Hughes have moved into their new quarters in the Coogan building.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business is holding out quite well and, taking everything into consideration, we have no kick coming. The demand for the better grade of flowers is good and there is not enough of this class to fill all orders. Beauties are coming in fairly large numbers and of nice quality for this time of the year. They sell well at the rate of $1 per foot of stem. Other roses are rather scarce and the quality is nothing to brag on. Some of them are being cut from new stock and they bid fair to be fine shortly. Carnations are also scarce and sell well. Some of them are still of very good quality. Some fine gladioli are to be had at $3 per 100. There is a good supply of green stock of all kinds.

Various Notes.

The S. A. F. convention is now the main topic of conversation among the craft. There will be a good-sized delegation from this city. All the old timers are going, together with many new ones who will take in the convention and the World's Fair at the same time.

Geo. Tromey, head hustler, at Fred Gear's establishment, has been in a hospital undergoing an operation. He is much improved at present and hopes to be out in a few days.

Albert Miller and F. Kyrk are spending their vacation in St. Louis.

Mrs. Julius Baer and son are at French Lick Springs, Ind. J. O'Malley is also there.

L. H. Kyrk is spending his spare time at the Y. M. C. A. camp on the Miami river.

Wm. H. Gear is at Mt. Clemens, Mich.

Visitors: John A. McKeefory and B. Esehner, both of Philadelphia.

C. J. OHMER.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There is more business in the cut flower centers of late. Flowers are more plentiful. Funeral orders form the bulk of the work. Some of these have been quite large. Carnations continue scarce. Asters are more plentiful but very poor in quality, as a rule. Roses are improving, especially American Beauties. The street had it that Charles E. Meehan told Leo Niessen he had better make hay while the sun shone, by which he was understood to mean that the Chestnut Hill Beauties would soon compete with those from Newport. John Burton and Meyers & Samtman are both cutting again. Robert Scott & Son are sending in some splendid, long-stemmed blooms to S. S. Pennock and Edw. Reid. Gladioli are very plentiful. There is a fair supply of fine valley and there are a few cattleyas.

Kentias at Wyncote.

Joseph Heacock has as pretty a lot of kentias at his place at Wyncote as one could wish to see. Rumors of their number and quality had been flying about for some time. When John Savage and Phil saw them early this week, they presented a truly magnificent sight. Five immense houses, besides several smaller ones, were almost entirely filled with kentias, all in superb condition, looking strong enough to stand anything. Mr. Heacock believes in giving his kentias plenty of air and plenty of room. That they like this treatment their rich green foliage and perfect shape abundantly prove.

All sizes are here in force, from the little fellows in seed boxes and benches to the made-up specimens in 12-inch pots that are as fine as skillful culture can make them. The medium sizes are very fine. K. Belmoreana exceeds K. Forsteriana in numbers. A block of the latter variety in 8-inch pots are being reserved for making up in 12-inch pots, three smaller plants being used around each 8-inch. The kentias all appeared perfectly clean. No washing has ever been necessary, just the hose scientifically used. Besides kentias, Mr. Heacock has some Areca lutescens, Cocos Weddeliana, Cibotium Schiedei and Nephrolepis exaltata Bostoniensis.

The Beauty houses were in excellent condition. One house in solid beds in its third year, cut back hard, was full of heavy shoots soon likely to tempt the cutting knife. The most forward of the houses of young stock was nearly as far advanced and all were full of breaks from the lower eyes. There was a house each of Brides and Maids in good shape and one of Liberty, lifted plants just getting away.

The carnations were brought in from the field and planted in the houses, still shaded last week. The varieties grown are White Cloud, Joost, Melba, Mrs. Lawson and Enchantress, all nice stocky stuff.

Camp Hill.

G. C. Watson piloted some twenty-five gardeners and florists out to Camp Hill last Saturday in response to the invitation of Thomas B. Meehan to visit his nursery at Dreshertown. Mr. Meehan received his guests at the railway station with a cordial welcome. Two large four-horse wagons took the party through some pretty country to the nursery, about three miles away.

Here an excellent lunch of sandwiches, salad and cream, well irrigated, received due attention. Then the party again mounted the seats on the wagons and drove around the great nursery, which lies in the beautiful White Marsh valley. The whole place was in splendid condition, the quality and variety of the stock and the neatness of the grounds eliciting many words of praise.

Next came the serious business of the afternoon, a cricket match between John Gardiner's Montgomery county eleven and an eleven selected from the gardeners and florists of P. F. C. The wicket was not in favor of run getting, Montgomery county, who had scored a clever victory over an eleven of the M. C. C. the day before, winning by a score of 50 to 27. After a little more irrigation, made necessary by their exertions, the two elevens were driven back to Camp Hill station after a delightful afternoon.

Mr. Meehan's guests were: S. Adelberger, Samuel Batchelor, John Burton, George Burton, Edward Campbell, Wm. Carey, Edward Clang, C. W. Cox, George Craig, C. R. Dodds, Frank Ewing, John Fowler, John C. Gardiner, George Gardiner, Neil Gardiner, J. Hallowell, Alfred Hardy, Robert Kift, Wm. Lord, Edwin Lonsdale, Thomas Roberts, Wm. Robertson, David Rust, W. J. Stewart, John Thatcher, G. C. Watson, John Westcott and Phil.

The Dreshertown Nursery was started ten years ago, when the firm of Thomas Meehan & Sons bought fifty odd acres of ground as a wholesale department for their Germantown nursery. Farms have been added during the past five years until today they have 216 acres, all planted. They do a wholesale business with growers, landscape gardeners, parks and cemeteries. The regular force consists of thirty-five men, but in the busy season an additional force of seventy-five men is added. These are kept on until all orders are filled, then some are released, the rest staying for the planting and first ground cleaning. After that is done the force is reduced to its regular size. Ten horses are kept at work plowing and cultivating the rows alternately. There is a big packing shed through which the big teams can drive. The shipping station, Dresher, on the Trenton cut off, is only three minutes distant.

Bowling.

The new competition for places on the team to represent our champion club at St. Louis, was begun on the alleys in Horticultural Hall last Thursday evening. Ten players, S. Adelberger, George Anderson, Wm. J. Baker, D. T. Connor, George Craig, Samuel Dunlap, Fred Ehret, W. R. Gibson, Robt. Kift and Wm. Robertson, competed. They will roll fifteen games each, finishing scarcely two days before they are scheduled to start for Missouri.

Various Notes.

Edward Reid sailed on Thursday for Savannah, "to look at the cotton crop."

Robert Craig is going to St. Louis to judge the horticultural exhibits.

David Rust has been elected a Flower Market director to fill the unexpired term of Edwin Lonsdale.

Charles D. Ball and W. H. Taplin have left for the convention.

Henry Engler has a pretty lot of Chrysanthemum Lavender Queen in the bench.

Edward J. Fancourt will represent Samuel S. Pennock at the St. Louis convention.

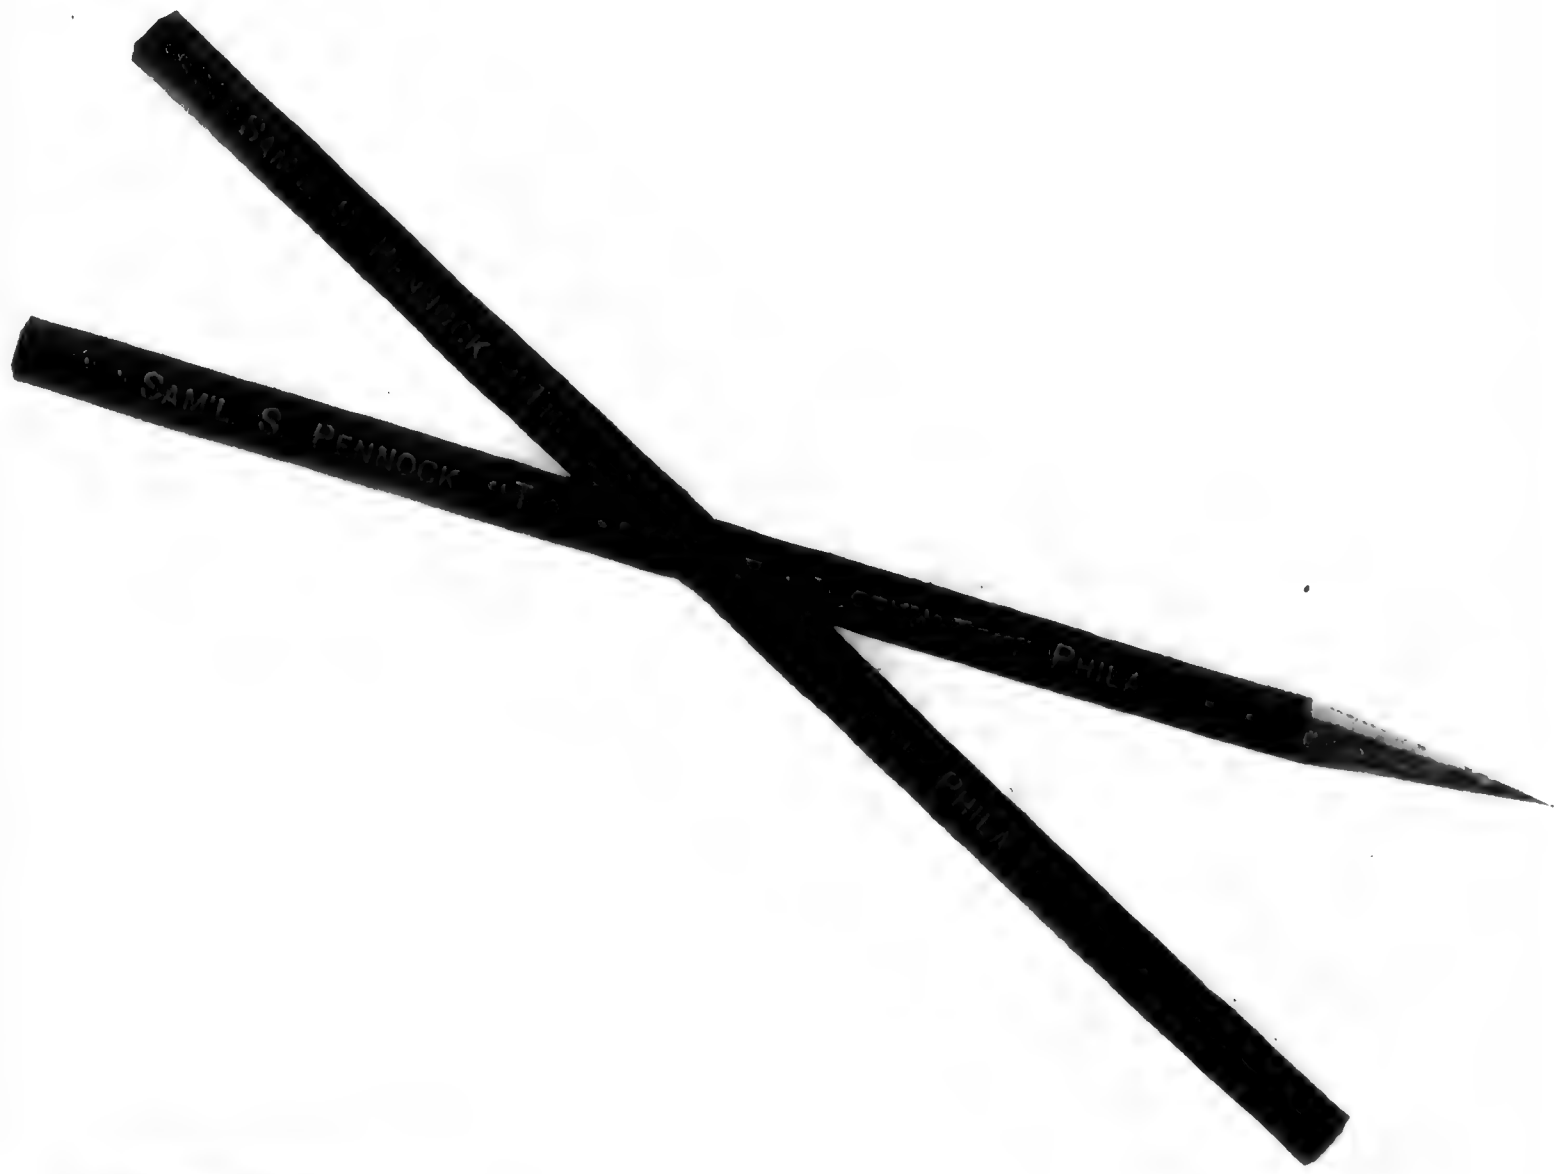
Rural Notes.

Martin Richardson has an addition to his family. It is a baby boy, weighs nine and a quarter pounds with not a hair on its head. Martin is very pleased. So are we. There have been awfully few babies hereabouts in these hard times and you can't make much out of rural notes without babies to talk about.



George Howard and Frank White had a full holiday on the Fourth, so in honor of the day they sent up a big balloon and on it fastened a post card addressed to the Boss asking the finder to give place and time balloon came down. The balloon set fire to a fellow's chicken house and frightened his cow so it won't milk. The fellow has been to see the Boss three times about it and wants $25 damages.

The boss had given Sambo a holiday. The plants were all delivered, the wagon had gone to the shop, the gray mare to the pasture, and Sambo was on his way to see his folks in Maryland. As the train entered his native state, Sambo was surprised to see the conductor post the sign "Colored" in his car and order all the fine white folks out into the next car, which was old and dirty, where they were crowded together like sheep, while he, poor Sambo, had a brand new car all to himself like a railroad president or an orchid grower. Such are the beauties of the "Jim Crow Act."

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

There is more business in the cut flower centers of late. Flowers are more plentiful. Funeral orders form the bulk of the work. Some of these have been quite large. Carnations continue scarce. Asters are more plentiful but very poor in quality, as a rule. Roses are improving, especially American Beauties. The street had it that Charles E. Meehan told Leo Niessen he had better make hay while the sun shone, by which he was understood to mean that the Chestnut Hill Beauties would soon compete with those from Newport. John Burton and Meyers & Samtman are both cutting again. Robert Scott & Son are sending in some splendid, long-stemmed blooms to S. S. Pennock and Edw. Reid. Gladioli are very plentiful. There is a fair supply of fine valley and there are a few cattleyas.

Kentias at Wyncote.

Joseph Heacock has as pretty a lot of kentias at his place at Wyncote as one could wish to see. Rumors of their number and quality had been flying about for some time. When John Savage and Phil saw them early this week, they presented a truly magnificent sight. Five immense houses, besides several smaller ones, were almost entirely filled with kentias, all in superb condition, looking strong enough to stand anything. Mr. Heacock believes in giving his kentias plenty of air and plenty of room. That they like this treatment their rich green foliage and perfect shape abundantly prove.

All sizes are here in force, from the little fellows in seed boxes and benches to the made-up specimens in 12-inch pots that are as fine as skillful culture can make them. The medium sizes are very fine. K. Belmoreana exceeds K. Forsteriana in numbers. A block of the latter variety in 8-inch pots are being reserved for making up in 12-inch pots, three smaller plants being used around each 8-inch. The kentias all appeared perfectly clean. No washing has ever been necessary, just the hose scientifically used. Besides kentias, Mr. Heacock has some Areca lutescens, Cocos Weddeliana, Cibotium Schiedei and Nephrolepis exaltata Bostoniensis.

The Beauty houses were in excellent condition. One house in solid beds in its third year, cut back hard, was full of heavy shoots soon likely to tempt the cutting knife. The most forward of the houses of young stock was nearly as far advanced and all were full of breaks from the lower eyes. There was a house each of Brides and Maids in good shape and one of Liberty, lifted plants just getting away.

The carnations were brought in from the field and planted in the houses, still shaded last week. The varieties grown are White Cloud, Joost, Melba, Mrs. Lawson and Enchantress, all nice stocky stuff.

Camp Hill.

G. C. Watson piloted some twenty-five gardeners and florists out to Camp Hill last Saturday in response to the invitation of Thomas B. Meehan to visit his nursery at Dreshertown. Mr. Meehan received his guests at the railway station with a cordial welcome. Two large four-horse wagons took the party through some pretty country to the nursery, about three miles away.

Here an excellent lunch of sandwiches, salad and cream, well irrigated, received due attention. Then the party again mounted the seats on the wagons and drove around the great nursery, which lies in the beautiful White Marsh valley. The whole place was in splendid condition, the quality and variety of the stock and the neatness of the grounds eliciting many words of praise.

Next came the serious business of the afternoon, a cricket match between John Gardiner's Montgomery county eleven and an eleven selected from the gardeners and florists of P. F. C. The wicket was not in favor of run getting, Montgomery county, who had scored a clever victory over an eleven of the M. C. C. the day before, winning by a score of 50 to 27. After a little more irrigation, made necessary by their exertions, the two elevens were driven back to Camp Hill station after a delightful afternoon.

Mr. Meehan's guests were: S. Adelberger, Samuel Batchelor, John Burton, George Burton, Edward Campbell, Wm. Carey, Edward Clang, C. W. Cox, George Craig, C. R. Dodds, Frank Ewing, John Fowler, John C. Gardiner, George Gardiner, Neil Gardiner, J. Hallowell, Alfred Hardy, Robert Kift, Wm. Lord, Edwin Lonsdale, Thomas Roberts, Wm. Robertson, David Rust, W. J. Stewart, John Thatcher, G. C. Watson, John Westcott and Phil.

The Dreshertown Nursery was started ten years ago, when the firm of Thomas Meehan & Sons bought fifty odd acres of ground as a wholesale department for their Germantown nursery. Farms have been added during the past five years until today they have 216 acres, all planted. They do a wholesale business with growers, landscape gardeners, parks and cemeteries. The regular force consists of thirty-five men, but in the busy season an additional force of seventy-five men is added. These are kept on until all orders are filled, then some are released, the rest staying for the planting and first ground cleaning. After that is done the force is reduced to its regular size. Ten horses are kept at work plowing and cultivating the rows alternately. There is a big packing shed through which the big teams can drive. The shipping station, Dresher, on the Trenton cut off, is only three minutes distant.

Bowling.

The new competition for places on the team to represent our champion club at St. Louis, was begun on the alleys in Horticultural Hall last Thursday evening. Ten players, S. Adelberger, George Anderson, Wm. J. Baker, D. T. Connor, George Craig, Samuel Dunlap, Fred Ehret, W. R. Gibson, Robt. Kift and Wm. Robertson, competed. They will roll fifteen games each, finishing scarcely two days before they are scheduled to start for Missouri.

PACIFIC COAST.

The Market.

The aster season is at hand and, although the flowers are not yet in their greatest profusion, they are coming into town in goodly quantities. They are reasonably cheap, but will be lower in price in the course of a week or so. Now that this flower has come to remain a few weeks the strain is taken off the demand for carnations and other flowers and they have dropped somewhat in price. Many of the growers are making arrangements to replant their houses and there is no profusion of either roses or pinks. Of the former the price remains about the same as quoted last week, with only a fair amount of stock offered. Outdoor stuff of all kinds is plentiful, although sweet peas are beginning to be shorter in the stem. Lilium album and rubrum are in good demand and a few longiflorums are seen. Valley is plentiful and is selling at about $5 per hundred. Business is only fair. We have had some wedding decorating and a little spurt of funeral work during the past week.

Various Notes.

Last week the street corner sellers of flowers won another point in the fight commenced by Frank Shibeley in behalf of the Retail Florists' Association to put the basket venders out of business. Judge Sloss refused to grant the injunction asked by the florists to prevent the city authorities from granting permits to the street flower sellers. In the application for an injunction the retailers declare that the basket men are nuisances and that unless the injunction against them is granted, individual arrests will be made through the police department.

John Vallance, of the Cox Seed Company, has just returned from a two weeks' vacation spent at his ranch at Livermore.

Capt. Emil Kellner, for fourteen years head gardener at the State University at Berkeley, died at the Fabiola Hospital on Tuesday of last week. He was a veteran of the civil war and well known to the gardening fraternity on this coast.

Professor Hugo De Vries, the Dutch botanist, is at present touring California and studying our methods regarding horticulture and agriculture. He spent a portion of this week inspecting the Morse seed farms near San Jose.

A farewell banquet is to be given during the coming week at the Palace Hotel in honor of Alexander Craw, lat quarantine officer for the horticultural commissioners, prior to his departure for the Hawaiian Islands.

A. Galloway, of Fruitvale, is cutting some extra fine Estelle and Lawson carnations at present. G.

THE ROOTS OF SHADE TREES.

An interesting case is being fought at present in the Alameda county courts, between the town of Oakland and some of the property owners who have had shade trees planted in front of their places by the municipality. One of the disgruntled parties cut down several of the trees in front of his premises, for which he was promptly arrested. He maintained that the trees were a nuisance in that they destroyed cement sidewalks and choked up sewers. The variety of tree in this particular instance was the white elm.

The white elm I have not found to be harmful, either from its roots following up sources of moisture or from overturning cement sidewalks. Under ordinary conditions it does not root deeply, nor is it inclined to sucker badly unless the tree has been abused through too violent pruning or from an accidental loss of too many branches. It is not as liable to break through a sidewalk as is the cork-bark elm, but there should be no difficulty with either of them if the suckers that come up through the ground are kept cut down for the first couple of years. After that, unless the tree gets badly broken, there will be no trouble.

People here have become prejudiced against large trees in general on account of the tendency the eucalyptus has of following for long distances a few drops of water and growing in through the minute holes in a sewer pipe. In a couple of years they completely fill it and destroy its usefulness. The eucalyptus was planted along sidewalks here in great quantities years ago, and on account of its bad actions with the town sewers they are no longer planted in this immediate vicinity. We are planting great quantities of white maple and, although this family of trees roots well down in the soil, I have seen no ill effects in drain pipes and no suckering. Poplars do not root as deeply as the maple and will not harbor any root-shoots unless the tree itself is badly handled. Locusts have long roots and are fond of water, but I have seen no instances where they have damaged sewers.

In evergreen trees, Acacia melonxylon sends its roots well down in the soil and is a gross feeder, which fact is true of all the acacia family. The Monterey cypress and pine do not root deeply and never sucker, but they spread their fibrous roots well over the surface of the surrounding country in their search for moisture. The sycamore, ash, black walnut, linden, red maple, tulip poplar, birch, horse chestnut or mulberry are not destructive to sewer system, which fact I have proven by having them growing within twenty-five feet of a drain pipe that has been laid for upwards of twenty years, and is still in perfect working order. Of course, we have a long, dry summer in California, and all trees naturally hunt for moisture, but excepting with the eucalyptus family I have had no trouble. Regarding suckering, if any shoots that may appear are cut off at the same time the weeds are hoed out they never make their appearance after the second year, providing, of course, the tree is not mutilated so much that it makes an effort to keep growing by suckering from the ground. BALTIMORE.

The Market.

Business is quite satisfactory, everything considered. Some days the demand is good, succeeded by an extremely dull day, as is usual during July and August. At this writing there are too many roses of most all kinds. Especially is this true with Maman Cochet. Asters were a glut last week but are coming less freely now. Fisher carnations are not selling very well and are plentiful. Very few indoor carnations are to be had and bring from 75 cents to $1.25 per 100; outdoor stock brings 50 to 75 cents. Other prices are: Cochet roses $1.50 to $2 per 100; Gates, Maids, Kaiserins, Ivory, $2 to $4; gladioli, $2 to $4; asters 35 to 75 cents.

Various Notes.

Misses Matilda and Rosa Held have returned from a three weeks' stay at Atlantic City. Their mother and sister, Lena, are on their vacation at the same city.

Miss Alice Graham, who was operated on a few weeks ago for appendicitis, is speedily recovering.

Mrs. Henry Fischer is at the City hospital, having also been operated on for appendicitis last Saturday. She is said to be improving and hopes for her recovery are entertained.

Mrs. Kate Patterson will leave Wednesday for an extended western trip.

S. Uhlfelder & Co. have discontinued business. Mr. Uhlfelder expects to open another store in the near future.

Very few of the florists are going to the S. A. F. convention at St. Louis. Those who will go expect to leave Saturday evening.

MORE and more are planters discovering that "cheap" nursery stock is dearest in the end.

THE states of Oregon and Washington are making rapid progress in fruit growing, and nursery business is good there.

THE landscape departments of the leading nurseries were valuable adjuncts the past season and will prove even more profitable as the wealth of the country increases.

IF an oak is pruned severely when transplanted it recovers quickly and makes a fairly rapid growth. The reputation for slow growth is a libel upon this most valuable tree.

THE Swain Nelson Sons' Co., Chicago, has been incorporated with $20,000 capital stock to do a general nursery and florists' business. The incorporators are Seymour G. and A. E. Nelson and A. L. Goerwitz.

MILDEW on garden roses may be combatted with sulphur and soot; one of these should be applied the moment the disease makes its apearance. Ellwanger & Barry advise that the plants be first sprinkled with water, so that the substance applied will adhere.

THE Pebble Hill Fruit Farm and Nurseries, Inc., of Winchester, Tenn., have bought the Oak Grove Nurseries, also of Winchester. They will consolidate the two under their present name. This purchase will give them 750,000 each June bud peach for this fall and dormant peach for next fall's delivery.

W. J. Sherry, of Johnson & Stokes, Philadelphia, is spending his vacation at Ocean Grove, N. J.

Poat Bros., Ettrick, Va., report a good demand for narcissus bulbs and are sold up to the limit of their supply.

The dry weather in North Carolina has operated to reduce the tuberose crop, some shippers estimating as much as one-third.

The W. S. Gilbreath Seed Co., Indianapolis, report that they are very well pleased with the situation and outlook so far as they have gone.

Visited Chicago:—Geo. C. Thomson, representing R. & J. Farquhar & Co., Boston, Mass., on his way to St. Louis; John Bodger, of Santa Paula, Cal.

Very hot, dry weather in the Quedlinburg district, in France, and in England, in July did considerable damage to crops for seed, but good rains came in season to avert disaster.

A very serious hurt has been done the past week to the cucumber seed crops in southern Michigan. Dry weather and the blight together promise to make the crop exceedingly light.

Bean crops in central Michigan promise well, good reports as to Wardwells are coming in. From the present outlook it is hoped that this year a fair harvest of this important variety will be realized.

Pickle packers at a meeting in Chicago recently decided not to make prices until the outlook for the new crop is better defined. The crop in the middle west is late, and blight has injured the vines in some localities.

Rochester, N. Y.—Frank H. Battles, seedsman, at 49 North street, has made an assignment to William L. Manning. Liabilities are placed at $40,000, with nominal assets at about half that sum and actual assets slightly smaller.

The sweet corn crop at the present time is looking well but the late varieties are far behind what they ought to be at this season of the year and the best authorities on crop estimates fear the crop will be cut by cold weather before it matures sufficiently.

Philippe de Vilmorin, head of the house of Vilmorin-Andrieux & Co., Paris, will reach New York about August 23 for a visit to the principal seed buyers and with a party bound for the St. Louis Fair, where he has a commission from the French government.

The main shipments of Harrisii bulbs from Bermuda reached New York July 25 this year, on the Trinidad. She had for H. H. Berger & Co., 105 cases; Peter Henderson & Co., 103; Wm. Hagemann, 504; F. R. Pierson Co., 138; Vaughan's Seed Store, 747; Jas. Kempe, 35; Maltus & Ware, 5; Wakem & McLaughlin, 86; to order, 1,330; total, 3,053 cases.

H. Nungesser & Co. received 200 bags of seeds on La Champagne from Havre July 30.

The Missouri Seed Co., Kansas City, Mo., has been incorporated with $30,000 paid up capital by John Tobin, Thomas Tobin, E. M. Sauer and A. C. Turgeon.

The first French bulbs reached New York on the Germania from Marseilles, July 28. The consignees and number of cases were as follows: Stumpp & Walter Co., 182; Ralph M. Ward & Co., 120; Weeber & Don, 64; Peter Henderson & Co., 102; F. R. Pierson Co., 85; Vaughan's Seed Store, 86; Schlegel & Fottler Co., 63; C. D. SEEDS FOR TEST.

The Secretary of the Treasury on July 27 addressed the following order to all officers of the customs:

At the instance of the Secretary of Agriculture, it is hereby directed that, commencing July 1, 1904, and continuing for one year, two-ounce samples of all importations of 100 pounds or more of grass, clover, and forage-plant seeds be prepared at the earliest practicable date after entry, and forwarded to the Seed Laboratory, Department of Agriculture Washington, D. C., labeled with names and addresses of consignors and consignees, name of seed as given in the invoice, and quantity of the consignment.

Milwaukee, Wis.—It looks as though there would be ten or a dozen go to the convention from here.

Belvidere, Ill.—B. R. Lucas is going into the greenhouse business quite extensively and has just received a large consignment of carnation plants for benching.

The First Steps!

"I have several times been consulted by those who would make a beginning in the Florists' business. In each case I have said that the first step is to subscribe for a Trade Paper, and the next to procure a copy of The Florists' Manual."

WASHINGTON.

Convention Wanted.

Washington is in the field as an active candidate for the S. A. F. Convention of 1905. We now have an active Florists' Club under the efficient leadership of Wm. F. Gude, with Peter Bissett as secretary. The club met August 2 and voted to invite the S. A. F. here next year. Washington is a cooler place than St. Louis and there are always sights to be seen here by those who are not frequent visitors to the nation's capital. A convention here will almost certainly attract many who have never attended an S. A. F. meeting and, obviously, many who, though they have attended in years gone by, were not seen at Milwaukee or Asheville and are not likely to be at St. Louis. Washington is the logical meeting place for 1905.

Death of J. H. Ley.

John H. Ley, the plantsman, is dead. He was fifty-seven years of age, a native of Birmingham, England, but had spent many years in business here. He was for a time, after his emigration, an employe of Siebrecht & Son, New Rochelle, N. Y., and later of N. Studer, of Anacostia, D. C. Later he went into business for himself at Good Hope, removing a few months ago to Langdon, another suburb of Washington, where he died July 26. He leaves a widow and several children, two of the sons being in the retail business in this city.

CHAMPAIGN, ILL.—Thomas Franks is busy with his extensive remodeling work, which he is anxious to see completed.

I HAVE certainly been well pleased with the REVIEW and would not like to be without it; I think every florist should take it.—C. L. SHANKS, Newton, Kan.

I WOULD not think of doing without the REVIEW. It is both practical and interesting and using its advertisements has been very satisfactory.—M. MAGRUDER.

I LIKE the REVIEW and would not be without it. The only reason I did not advertise in it this season was that local trade took all the stock; did not have enough and had to buy through the advertisements in the REVIEW; that's where to look for what you want.—J. A. KENISTON, Newburyport, Mass.

AT THE CONVENTION.

BRAMPTON, ONT.

August 3 was a red letter day in the florists' line here, the Toronto Horticultural Society being the guests of the Dale Estate. After a visit to the greenhouses, the party adjourned to the Rose-Lee grounds, kindly lent for the occasion by Mr. Jennings, and a very good programme of sports was in order. A cricket match resulted in a win for the Toronto boys. But the tables were turned when the tug of war was the order. The ladies of Toronto received quite an ovation when they pulled the girls here about the field. The event of the day was the baldheaded men's race, which T. W. Duggan secured in fine style. Supper was served on the green and then the party was photographed. More racing was done and considerable bolstering in which Tom Manton, the genial Toronto florist, and the foreman of the Dale Estate played a conspicuous part. The day closed with an impromptu concert and the usual thanks at the club house. WM. DOWNING.

ORANGE, N. J.

A large and representative gathering met on August 5 to hear Leonard Barron tell the New Jersey Floricultural Society the advantages of organization. It provoked a lively discussion, the meeting refusing, however, to place itself on record.

Both of the leading orchidists of this section, Henry Graves and Wm. Barr, were represented, and the work of Edward Thomas and Arthur Bodwell were seen side by side. Gladioli from the estates of A. C. Von Gaasbeck and Chas. Hathaway, phlox from Sidney and Austin Colgate, Mrs. Wm. Pierson and John Crosby Brown; alamandas from O. D. Munn, and dahlias from W. J. Hesse, of Newark, were shown.

It was decided to keep the approaching "tin wedding" of the society in October in an appropriate manner.

PARKERSBURG, W. VA.—Gus Obermeyer will be at the S. A. F. convention next week. He has a big bed of his new canna, West Virginia, at the World's Fair.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Business is very slow just now, only funeral work. Asters are coming in but of poor quality, owing to the dry weather we are having.

The regular monthly meeting of the Kentucky Society of Florists was held August 2, at the handsome residence of Wm. Walker. A very large attendance was present and lots of business was transacted. The meeting was held on the beautiful lawn. After the meeting adjourned the club was invited to partake of a bountiful spread prepared by Mrs. Walker and was enjoyed by all who were present.

Jacob Schulz is preparing his carnation houses and will soon plant them.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Marret and Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Reimers will leave August 16 to take in the World's Fair at St. Louis.

Jos. Coenen & Co.'s place is in apple-pie order.

Hy. Fuchs' house of roses is looking fine.

Mrs. C. B. Thompson, who has been very ill for some time, is much improved.

Mrs. Chas. Reimers has returned from her trip to California and enjoyed it very much.

Miss Sidonea Coenen, daughter of Jos. Coenen, celebrated on Monday night her sixteenth birthday and the house was beautifully decorated with palms and ferns. The presents she received were fine and costly. Dancing was kept up to a late hour.

Quite a number are going to St. Louis to attend the convention.

Hy. Lichtefeld.

OCEANIC, N. J.

The river carnival at Red Bank was one of the most beautiful events of its kind in the history of this section, one that will hardly be forgotten by those who witnessed it. The North Shrewsbury river was covered with boats of every description, gayly decorated for the occasion, the various colors and pretty women making the river like a fairyland picture. In the evening the parade of illuminated boats of all kinds took place. Each section of boats was headed by a band. The first prize for the best decorated power boat was awarded to B. H. Borden, of Oceanic. O. E. Davis was second.

The village Improvement Society of Oceanic has effected a permanent organization. The summer residents take great interest in this society. The officers are: W. H. Pearsall, president; H. B. Borden, first vice-president; Miss Lily Bliss, second vice-president; C. H. Walling, secretary; J. Enright, treasurer.

Wm. Turner and the writer took a trip to Yonkers to see our old friend, Mr. Mackenzie, before he leaves Greystone, on September 1, to go as superintendent of Percy Chrubb's place, Glencove, L. I.

At the regular meeting of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society, Mr. Turner showed many fine water lilies. The secretary announced several donations for the fall show, for which the outlook is very promising. The judges of the evening were Geo. H. Hale and N. Butterbach. B.

CAMBRIDGE CITY, IND.—Thomas F. Peet has returned from Indianapolis and taken charge of greenhouses here.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA.—Miss Mabel Lindsay, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. M. Lindsay, died August 1, after a lingering illness. She was 25 years of age.

MORRISTOWN, N. J.—H. C. Holmes is making some alterations in his place, to afford better facilities for his prosperous retail business. R. A. McCurdy, president of the New York Mutual Life Insurance Co., is preparing to build a conservatory about 25x100. It is near the cut-flower establishment of Elwyn Waller and by comparison the foundations for the conservatory look as if intended for a sky-scraper.

NEWPORT, R. I.

The Market.

As August advances more and more dinner parties and luncheons are being given here, as well as other social entertainments of various kinds that all go to make business good for the florist. During the past ten days a great many flowers have been sold. In regard to prices they have changed very little since my last report two weeks ago, except that sweet peas, which the damp, foggy days have spoiled in many places, are scarce and higher; that is, you can get 25 cents per 100 for what two weeks ago you could not give away. Orchids also have been very short, the best cattleyas bringing $1 each some days. The finest American Beauty roses are retailing for $6 a dozen, and Kaiserins and Liberties for $3 to $4. Valley is always in good demand. Outdoor stuff goes even better than last week. Oriental poppies have sold especially well, many being used for dinner decorations. On the whole business is very good and will be for several weeks yet.

Various Notes.

Last Wednesday evening the Newport Horticultural Society held its regular meeting, President Sullivan in the chair. Many matters pertaining to the show next month were arranged. James T. Scott, with the F. R. Pierson Co., of Tarrytown, was present.

Leikens has made a very pretty floral effect in both his Bellevue avenue windows, clearing out everything save the dozens of miniature automobiles with pretty flowers, which he arranged in honor of the automobile meet here on Saturday.

The largest lawn fete that Newport has ever known will be given Monday afternoon at Edward Berwinds' beautiful estate.

George Westland has moved his family to Cambridge, Mass., where he has charge of the greenhouses and shrubbery of Mount Auburn cemetery.

Several gardeners have done a good business here, taking care of those places where no regular gardener is employed. They advertise "Gentlemen's places taken care of by the day, month or year." They furnish all plants and shrubbery needed at most reasonable rates, and charge 25 cents per hour for the labor.

The Market.

Trade still has the summer look and most of the retail stores are running with about half the force, the remainder being away on vacations. Good carnations are very scarce, as the houses have all been cleaned out and the outdoor stock is not fit to use. Roses are improving in quality and length of stem. Some very fine Kaiserins are coming in. The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. reports business same as other years, with nothing to complain of, but at the time the tables were full of asters, which they were offering for 25 cents per 100 and up.

Various Notes.

There is some convention talk and I feel quite sure that by the time they are ready to go, the Pittsburg delegation will number thirty-five or forty.

Earnest Zieger, manager for C. T. Siebert, has gone to Le Mars, Iowa, with his family. They will stop at many points of interest en route.

Walter Breitenstein has packed his canoe and gone to Sugar Island, to the annual meet of the American Canoe Association.

The new south side store of Geddis & Blind Bros. is well under way. They promise one of the best appointed stores west of New York. These boys are hustlers and, although one of the youngest firms, they are getting their share of the business.

Anthony Smith is sending A. W. Smith some of the finest asters and sweet peas seen here this year. These are grown on his Ohio farm. This is one of Anthony's hobbies, but he makes it pay just the same.

George Eichhorn has returned from a visit to Wilkesbarre, Pa., full of mining information. George is the boy who keeps them all on the move in the Pittsburg Market.

Mike Stafford, manager of Geddis & Blind Bros.' south side store, is in St. Louis doing the Pike.

John Urth, the McKeesport florist, is spending his vacation at Atlantic City. John is as good natured as he is big around, and when he lies down, it is farther to jump over him than to run around him.

South Bend, Ind., April 4, 1904.

"Superior to any Hot Water Boiler we have ever used. You certainly have placed the right name to your Boilers; no effort at all to keep the temperature at desired points when zero weather comes. Night after night the past severe winter weather gave your Boiler a good test. We are more than pleased with the Superior Boiler." Yours truly, Treanor & Rettic.

Our Platform

AS AT THE OPENING of a CAMPAIGN, each great political party declares its principles in a "Platform," so do we, at the approach of another season, make known the position from which we shall seek the continued support of the Trade.

THE PAST.

From an humble beginning, starting smaller than almost any wholesaler in Chicago ever did start, we have built up in eight years of steady growth, a business which warrants us in maintaining the largest and best equipped place in the city.

By careful, conservative management we have worked our way to the front.

We have taken good care of every flower shipped to us and earned the confidence of our growers that we are at all times working for their interests.

We have carefully studied the wants of our customers and proved to their satisfaction that we can be relied on at all times to furnish anything that is to be had in this market, and in addition we make SPECIAL EFFORTS to SUPPLY NOVELTIES or SPECIALTIES NOT ALWAYS TO BE HAD ELSEWHERE.

THE FUTURE.

In the coming season we shall conduct our business along the same lines as heretofore. We shall stand on our record—but we shall push harder than ever.

We shall have the stock—both quality and quantity—to do a larger business than ever before. We have a strong force of the most experienced and efficient employes, both in the selling and shipping departments, and they are fully alive to the fact that YOUR interests are the interests of this house.

We solicit the continued patronage of those who have been dealing with us, and we ask for the business of those with whom we have not yet done business, on this pledge: That in the future, as in the past, WE SHALL GIVE FAIR and SQUARE TREATMENT TO EVERYONE WITH WHOM WE HAVE DEALINGS.

WHY ARE WE ON TOP?

THE FLORISTS of the United States say it is because we are the Largest, Best Equipped and Most Progressive Florists' Supply House in this country, and they ought to know. The general verdict of all visitors at the Convention was that so fine an exhibit as ours had never been seen before. Mr. Bayersdorfer has just returned from ransacking Europe for Novelties, and our own big factory has not been idle. Our stock is now considerably finer than EVEN WE ever offered before. You can depend on us for the best of everything.

WE desire to call the attention of our friends in the trade to our new fern, to be introduced Spring of 1905, which we exhibited at the St. Louis Convention.

The beauty and value of this new fern can best be appreciated by seeing it. It is a sport from the Pierson Fern (Nephrolepis Piersoni), but is very much more beautiful and of greater commercial value. It is as different from the Pierson Fern as that is from the Boston. The small side pinnae are again subdivided, producing an exquisite and beautiful effect, changing the entire character of the fronds, which measure less than half the length and about twice the breadth of the fronds of the Pierson Fern. The fronds also assume an entirely different form, the side pinnae standing at right angles to the mid-rib of the frond, on edge rather than flat, as is usual, making both sides of the frond equally beautiful—entirely different from any other fern.

The plant is very dwarf, only about half the height of the Pierson Fern, and of very much more compact habit. Taking it altogether, it makes one of the most exquisite plants and one of the most valuable for table and house decoration that has ever been introduced. The cut fronds, on account of their beauty, will be in great demand for table decoration, design work, and for use in boxes of loose flowers. Well-grown plants make most magnificent specimens. We think there is nothing in the fern line that is so handsome as this beautiful fern when well grown. It is a wonderful improvement over Nephrolepis Piersoni in every respect, both in regard to beauty and habit of growth.

As an appreciation of its value, we would state that we were awarded this year the much coveted fifty ($50) dollar prize offered by the Horticultural Society of New York for the best new plant. It has been exhibited before several other horticul' tural societies this year, and has received the highest possible awards.

We will be glad to mail full description, etc., to our friends who do not have the opportunity of seeing this fern at St. Louis. We shall have plants to offer not only in small sizes, but also in large specimen plants in 6-inch, 8-inch and 10-inch pans. Prices on application.

The St. Louis Convention.

TWENTIETH MEETING OF THE SOCIETY OF AMERICAN FLORISTS.

OFFICERS FOR 1905:

President, J. C. VAUGHAN, Chicago, Ill.
Vice-President, J. R. FREEMAN, Washington, D. C.
Secretary, W. J. STEWART, Boston, Mass.
Treasurer, H. B. BEATTY, Oil City, Pa.

In another year the S. A. F. will reach its majority. The twentieth annual convention has been held at St. Louis this week and has redounded greatly to the credit of the society and the host, the St. Louis Florists' Club. The World's Fair was an attraction to many and served to bring a number sufficient to make up for the absence of large eastern delegations and the individuals who were kept away by the apparently not wholly unwarranted fear of hot weather. The attendance was excellent and the number of members who were accompanied by their wives was noticeable. The fear that the exposition would detract from the attendance at the sessions proved largely without basis, but the exhibitors felt the influence when it came to taking orders. The program was arranged for morning sessions only, after the first day, and the afternoons and evenings were left open for visiting the Fair. It proved an admirable arrangement and the good work of the local club caused everything to pass off with the utmost smoothness and earned the verdict that it was one of the most successful conventions the Society has ever held.

At the opening session Tuesday afternoon there were seated on the stage, besides the officers, the following ex-presidents: E. G. Hill, John Burton, Wm. Scott, W. F. Gude, Adam Graham, Edwin Lonsdale, W. N. Rudd, W. R. Smith and Robert Craig, besides the members of the board of directors and several state vice-presidents. The stage was handsomely decorated, as was the entrance to the building, which is the old exhibition building. The hall had very bad acoustics.

J. J. Beneke, president of the St. Louis Florists' Club, called for order and introduced Cyrus P. Waldbridge, president of the Business Men's League, to deliver the address of welcome. Mr. Waldbridge, then mayor of the city, welcomed the S. A. F. when it first met in St. Louis, eleven years ago, and referred pleasantly to that event. He said that when he received this invitation he did not know but what the florists had been so absorbed in their occupation that they had failed to take note of the political changes which had taken place. He said he would not expect them to be diverted from flowers by politics and demonstrated that the florists are God's lieutenants because they make even greater the glories of the Creator. He did not, as is usual, offer the keys to the city, doubtless because the mayor had taken them with him on his vacation.

The response was by Robert Craig, of Philadelphia, who referred to the hospitality of St. Louis during the convention of 1893, after which most of the members went to see the Chicago World's Fair, that great work of western enthusiasm, power and ability, not dreaming that the next gathering at St. Louis would see such glories as those of the present exposition. He quoted Bacon, that "men build finely before they garden finely," and regretted that at this Fair horticulture has not been developed as it might have been. He thanked Mr. Waldbridge for his hearty welcome and said he hoped to see the day when the S. A. F. shall again visit this good old town.

Mr. Beneke then introduced President Breitmeyer and presented him with a gavel on behalf of the St. Louis Florists' Club. Mr. Breitmeyer received an ovation which attested his unbounded popularity with the society and made it impossible to proceed for several minutes, after which he spoke a few words of welcome for the many ladies present and asked indulgence while he read his address, which was as follows:

President's Address.

Following the precedence established by the first president of this society and repeated by every one of my predecessors, I herewith present my address. First allow me to congratulate you upon the wisdom of having selected this beautiful city as a meeting place of this, the twentieth convention of the society. This great city which is aptly termed the commercial gateway of the great south. Eleven years ago it was our privilege and pleasure to meet here under the presidency of our esteemed and dearly beloved William R. Smith, through whose untiring energy and enthusiastic vigilance for over eight years, a national charter was obtained, and under which our society now operates with the dignity and prestige that most fittingly belongs to a society with the broad, lofty, progressive and elevating purposes for which the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists was organized.

It is a happy coincident, too, that we are convened here at a time when the Louisiana Purchase Exposition is open, with its many massive buildings, completely filled with the brilliant examples of the latest developments in art and the various industries of the civilized world. We can happily congratulate ourselves, too, that it is manifest to the thousands of visitors to the great exposition that the progressive and enterprising spirit that has made the show the success it is, has extended to nearly every branch of floriculture and horticulture, and that as we pass through these extensive grounds and the Horticulture building we can see evidences upon all sides showing examples of the florists' art and the results of the patient and vigilant work of the horticulturist and landscape gardener.

I was here in March last and observed with alarm the really great difficulties which lay in the way of those in charge of this feature of World's Fair work, and I behold today the most marvelous transformation from its rude, primitive condition to the beautiful park and pleasing slopes and approaches that now greet us.

To many of our members present and who will see for the first time the Missouri Botanic Gardens located here, there is a rich treat in store, and when the great extent of these magnificent grounds is open to them they will be forcibly impressed with the congratulations that are due to this city for being in possession of such a great educational institution. Its founder, the late Henry Shaw, has left an imperishable monument to the great love for flowers and their elevating influence that dwelled in him. Let us hope that the world may have many more of such men and that every great city in our land will some time be the beneficiary of men of such noble character and æsthetic sentiments.

Our Society.

With each recurring year it seems necessary to relate some of the achievements of the society for the benefit of prospective members, who, notwithstanding the wide publicity given our work through the trade press, still sometimes ask the childish question: "What good will it do me to belong to the society?" Under the circumstances one is at first inclined to be provoked by the question but, following the obedience to our well-known duty (for it is a duty that every member, as well as every officer, owes the society), we answer that for the past twenty years, covering the life of the society, the brightest minds and most capable men in every branch of our business have been reflecting the net results of their experiences, deep thoughts and investigations through the pages of the official reports of this society's doings. The methods of greenhouse building, cultural methods of the most successful growers, the most efficient manner of greenhouse heating, the manner of disposing of stock at wholesale, the most improved methods of the retailer, and subjects covering every branch and phase of the business, from the planting of the seed and rooting of the cutting to the final disposition of the product, has been, by the existence of this society and prompted by it, actually scattered broadcast to all who would but seek it.

We have inaugurated trade exhibitions annually and caused the same to be open free to the admiring public; we have stimulated a spirit of emulation between growers, which has resulted in bringing out a merit and general excellence of their product that was previously considered impossible; we have brought together and prompted the friendship of the grower and buyer of the east and the west, the north and the south; we have, by our annual meetings, brought together the employer and the employe and their free exchange of views unimpeded by fear or by jealousy; we have removed the barriers so that the young can learn from the old and the old can learn from the young; we have elevated the general aspect of the florists' occupation from former drudgery to that of a profession in which all may be proud to engage; we have neglected nothing that would aid the employer and the employe and advance their material interests; we have been a shining example of the great possibilities of a working organization, which has resulted in the multiplicity of similar societies working upon lines which are daily improving our general condition and increasing our prosperity.

These great advantages have been shared in by the employe as well as by the tradesman, and will continue to improve the former to the end that in this great country, where genius, enterprise and industry make it possible and quite probable for the servant of yesterday to be the employer of today.

Following out this line of thought, I would say that if this society should disband tomorrow, it has accomplished sufficient already to justify its existence and would deserve the everlasting praise of succeeding generations of florists.

Being still more specific, I am speaking within the strict confines of truth when I say that there is not a florist in the land today, whether he is or not a member of this organization, who has not already been benefited from the latest triumph of the society's efforts in causing a reduction of express rates on flowers, after the individual efforts of the largest shippers failed to accomplish it; the beneficiaries of the hail insurance adjustment of losses of thousands of feet of glass have good reasons to join the great chorus of satisfied members.

To further enumerate the many acknowledged achievements of the society would lengthen this address and delay the proceedings too long, and I will conclude this part of my address by saying that the society will continue its life of usefulness and will always be prepared to meet and remove from its path any obstruction calculated to impede its progress and beneficial influences.

The Future.

I certainly would like to see much more activity of our present members toward obtaining new recruits. I am sure that even a little effort by each one would result in materially increasing our membership. The life membership has been particularly slow in growth, and I earnestly commend this manner of support to all who are at all able. This year I have myself made considerable effort to enlist many into life membership and I am pleased to say that the cheerful responses have been considerable, which leads me to believe that much can be accomplished for the benefit of the society in this way, if the efforts are made.

J. C. Vaughan, President-Elect Society of American Florists.

An examination of the official reports of our convention proceedings will disclose the deplorable fact that the papers read at our meetings of recent years are being less and less discussed by the members present. The close observer will notice that this is not because of the lack of the intrinsic merit of the papers themselves, or the timely importance of the subjects treated by them, and we are therefore unwillingly forced to the natural conclusion that the cause lies in the evident apathy and apparent indifference of the members, for whose benefit all the work of the society is directed. I therefore ask your earnest consideration of this matter and most fervently hope for a revival of that spirited interest in our meetings which characterized the proceedings of the first ten years of the society's existence.

The Trade Papers.

The trade papers have rendered us much valuable assistance and we should feel grateful to them. They give wide publicity to our proceedings and acquaint the trade with the value of our work, but I sometimes question the propriety of allowing free publication of society matters, which belong properly to members only. It is sometimes claimed, and I believe truly so, that because of such publications in the trade papers, it appears to many that there is no necessity for belonging to the society in order to obtain copies of the proceedings in detail. It may be well for the society to give due consideration to this matter at this meeting and take whatever action on it may be found necessary, after a free discussion of it.

Trade Conditions.

From what information I have gathered, I am satisfied that the past season has not compared favorably with the former in as far as profits are concerned. The growers can partly account for this condition. The extra cost of fuel, with additional consumption, explains much of the situation. To make matters worse, the receipts both in money and productiveness fell behind the greater part of the season. Let us admit that this was the growers' experience.

The retailer who is not dependent on the same conditions as the grower, and who is by no means at the mercies of the weather or results of a coal strike, admits that his business was up to all expectations—in some cases exceeded that of former years. Taking it for granted that this is true, it is chiefly the growers who need the comfort of advice.

As your president, I take the liberty of saying a few words on the subject. From all reports, the prices obtained for products in the east are in advance of those obtained in the west. There must be a cause for this condition. Is it possible that it is due to over-production? The class of goods offered in the middle west is equal to the best in the country. Are the prices? If so, I fail to see it. I venture to say the condition has grown worse the last two years, and seems to have come as predicted—an abundance of good stock going to waste.

Need for a Reserve.

I think this is an opportune time to call your attention to that part of ex-President Burton's address last year, in which he said all should take caution and keep some of our earnings in reserve, and I believe he alluded particularly to our western brethren. I am of the same opinion. It might be well for the progressive, who are adding enough glass each year to alone swamp the section in which they are in, to hold off building a few years. It may help to equalize the production. Let the consumption exceed the production if it will. The general trade may benefit by it—the grower would at least. I do not mean to discourage progress, for that would be impossible.

It would be reasonable for men in our line of business to take a hint from what other industries are doing. For instance, a car-shop can close the doors of their shops in whole or in part, if business conditions require it. They then await the reawakening of business ere they operate again. An entirely different proposition for the florist. A greenhouse, once built, needs constant watching 365 days each year. With the present condition it is well to yield. We know the building operations have been far beyond normal of late; therefore a bit of caution will not go amiss.

I think it would be well for some of this enormous glass area which is now devoted to cut flowers to be used for growing a more extensive stock of flowering plants, in which the public is of late showing so much interest in all parts of the country. I quote the words of a shrewd grower, prominent in our midst, in which he uses good logic. He said: "No more building for me. I have a desire to see what a bank account looks like. Since I have had the building craze I have been a poor man." A good word spoken, I thought.

This is too often the case with the florists. They seem to have a hobby of being in debt constantly, caused, as a rule, by the anxiety to build greenhouses. We all know the result. Further, we are apt to establish poor credit. Whether it is by building greenhouses or building other houses, the credit of our business can stand for improvement. Too often it is impaired alone by the pure carelessness of those who need it most. This carelessness extends so far to the point of even refusing the courtesy of a reply to demands for payments, and we all know the natural result.

The Labor Problem.

The present time seems opportune for this society to, in some proper manner, do something toward the improvement of the conditions of most of our employes. Even the casual observer will notice the rapid but certain depletion in the ranks of efficient help engaged particularly in greenhouse work. It appears to me that a period of extreme difficulty in getting such efficient help for the necessary requirements is close at hand, and that we must make provisions to meet it.

We hear from many parts the cry of an employer's inability to secure help with sufficient knowledge and application to warrant their retention in greenhouse work with even a small share of responsibility. About twenty years ago this trouble did not confront the employer anywhere. He could obtain the necessary help required, from the small boy pulling weeds and cleaning pots to the section foreman. Apprentices were much the rule then and not the exception, but today we find but few boys at work in our establishments, and I am led to believe the reason for it is that the usual compensation given for the different grades of greenhouse work is, to the seeker for work, not sufficiently remunerative when compared with the wages offered and received by help in other lines. This, I think, is all a mistake.

We should seek to employ boys and teach them the business and teach them to feel attached to their chosen line of life's work, but to bring about this change, which if done at once would be a violent one, we must lend encouragement to the youthful applicant by pointing out the possibilities in the lines of promotion, that carries with such promotion and added responsibilities, wages and salaries which will at once seem sufficiently attractive to warrant the adoption of this line of work as one's life vocation. At the present time there is not the least stability to the wages and salaries given in any grade of greenhouse work, so that it is impossible to point out substantial reward for the prospective florist, and the result is, as above stated, a scarcity of the help required and a great deficiency in the knowledge of those at all obtainable.

Therefore, looking forward to a possible improvement of the condition, I would suggest that the society would appoint a committee to draw up a scale of wages that would, in the judgment of the committee, properly compensate the service rendered and which would be applicable to most places throughout the country, and let that scale be as generous as the business can afford. Then we may be able to enlist more in our pursuits than at present seems possible, and the merit of them will be improved, for if we would elevate our calling we must elevate the men engaged in it.

Amateur Societies.

I am much impressed with the extensive good work being done in many parts of the country by these unique organizations for home and civic improvement, and I believe this society should substantially recognize such work by the awarding of suitable medals and certificates to those of their members who are being particularly successful in the advancement of such work, which, even indirectly, operates to the pecuniary advantage of members of our own society. I earnestly hope that such action as may be necessary will be taken at this meeting to carry into effect this recommendation.

During the past winter I had the pleasure of attending the lectures in our city of Prof. Zueblin, on civic improvements which pointed out the great work done on these lines and the interest shown now most universally in this most commendable work, and when I contemplate the interest and real enthusiasm shown in matters horticultural, bearing upon improvements and embellishments of home and public grounds by the League of Civic Improvements, the Outdoor Art Association, and similar associations, I feel that our members are losing a grand opportunity to advance this feature of that line of business, which belongs, almost exclusively, to our craft. We may, I think, very properly and to great advantage identify ourselves with these associations and lend what assistance we can to the development of ornamental horticulture and thereby create a further demand for the class of stock required in work of this nature, and never losing sight of the necessity of providing this stock. I observe that the nurserymen are already alive to the importance of this branch of the business, which properly belongs to us, and their encroachment upon this field is the result of our own indifference to the growing and sale of this very remunerative class of stock.

In many of our public parks, notably those of Cleveland, where I was recently shown around by ex-President Graham, I observed the almost entire absence of beds of flowering plants. This I much deplore and fear that the extreme has been reached in following the ideas of the late Mr. MacMillan, of Buffalo, who some time ago advocated a less profuse display of this form of embellishment of public grounds and a more general use of herbaceous and other ornamental stock. I hope that flowering plants, although annually replanted, will find favor with park commissioners everywhere.

Bureau of Statistical Information.

I would suggest that this meeting take decided action toward the establishment and maintenance of a complete system of collecting reliable data of all kinds relating to our business and its several branches. I believe this work should be thoroughly and reliably done by permanent committees appointed for the purpose and that a compilation of such information should be effected and preserved through the office of the secretary of this society. Some attempts have been made in the past to gather statistics of glass areas, etc., throughout the country, but they even have met with indifferent and uncertain results. It certainly would be of great benefit to all interested in the growth and general advancement of our industry to be able to reach, without difficulty, information properly tabulated covering the many phases of its development, especially so when such information is absolutely authentic, as it necessarily would be when coming through the reliable channels of the membership of this society. Eleven years ago this matter was referred to by ex-President Wm. R. Smith, and I hope this year will see the realization of this feature of the society's development.

Closer Relations.

Three years ago it was thought desirable by many of our members to bring about closer relations of certain other societies with this, the parent society, so that the co-operations of all may be effected to the mutual benefit of all the organizations referred to. You are all aware of the failure of our two attempts to adopt an amendment calculated to bring about the desired result. Your executive committee again considered the matter at its meeting in St. Louis last spring, according to the instructions of the Milwaukee convention, and decided to again bring the matter up at this meeting for final disposition. I hope that the amendment will be adopted as it reads, and if the organization whose co-operation is solicited by it fails to accept the same it will be no fault of the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists. I believe it would be far better for the society to go upon record as having offered this inducement to the kindred societies, as in a large measure carrying out the good purposes of the development of our industry as contemplated by the society at its original inception.

Arbitration Committee.

There seems to be a general desire for the restoration of the arbitration committee. From many parts of the country we hear of grievances affecting our members and a manifestation of willingness to allow the adjustment of these real or fancied wrongs to be affected through a committee. Thus it will be possible to maintain the pacific relations between buyer and seller that are so much desired and actually needed for the commercial interests of our members. If the committee appointed a year ago for the purpose of establishing standard sizes of plants and bulbs brings in a report at this meeting indicating the practical feasibility of the plan, and if such standards are adopted and put into operation as generally and completely as were the standard pots, then the work of the arbitration committee could be more clearly defined, and its usefulness far greater than under the present circumstances, where no definite established standard exists. After hearing a report of that committee, of which Mr. Eichholz is chairman, we can at this meeting, if having the approval of the convention, establish at once the arbitration committee, as I can see no good reason for deferring it for another year.

J. R. Freeman, Vice-President-Elect Society of American Florists.

Proposed Permanent Home.

I have given much thought to this important matter and must say that as much as I would welcome the realization of this idea, I do not feel very sanguine of the success of the project in the near future. When it is considered that today, after the society's existence of twenty years, our treasury has only about $5,000 on hand, it is difficult for the most enthusiastic to see in the near future the feasibility of a scheme involving such a monetary outlay as would be necessarily required for the purpose. Even the maintenance of such an institution, should it come into our possession free of debt, would give much anxiety to the officers of the society. However, the idea is a magnificent one and I do not wish to in any way discourage it, but on the contrary recommend keeping it alive and frequently dwelled upon so that the importance and desirability of it will grow in our hearts at present and in the future, so that the fond hopes of many of us may yet be realized, even if its accomplishment must be postponed to a time far distant from the present.

The consideration of a permanent home for the society leads me to the thought that much of what we would naturally expect of a beneficial character from such an institution, if it were an accomplished fact, is really easily obtainable through the existing experimental stations already established in many of our states. I find that these institutions, which are a result of a part of our taxation, are admirably and completely equipped with both the knowledge and practical facilities for efficiently testing seeds, plants and cultural methods, the results of which can be easily obtained by the mere request of those interested. Furthermore, those persons having such institutions in charge seem even eager to give out, for the benefit of all, the results of their experiments and practices. I therefore urge our members to appreciate the value of these available agencies and freely make use of the advantages they offer us.

The Carnation League.

It seems fitting that our society should give its official approval and continued encouragement to the Carnation League of America. Mr. H. M. Altick, one of the executive committee of S. A. F., who is chairman of the committee on McKinley memorial representing the American Carnation Society, and which was endorsed by this society a year ago, has been expending commendable energy in behalf of this most deserving project, which I am sure will meet the hearty approval and most generous response of the members of this society, whose charter happily bears the signature of the late distinguished and beloved president, William McKinley.

Another matter that I deem of sufficient importance to here refer to is the customary practice and usual instructions given to the various committees. In most cases where their appointment is deemed advisable a report from them is not made until the next annual meeting. This, I think, is a mistake and would suggest that such committees should do their work as soon after the appointment as practical and make the report at once to the secretary, who could without delay apprise the president, and after the approval of the latter, publication to the members could be made and the result of the committee's work put into immediate operation. While considering the work of committees I will say that I think this method of making a division of the society's work should be more freely exercised, but men of the best qualifications should be selected and they should be made fully aware of the prompt and efficient work expected of them.

Trade Exhibitions.

The trade exhibitions connected with our annual conventions, I am glad to note, are growing in extent, importance and popularity, and rightly so, for the benefits arising from them are many and widespread, and I sincerely hope for a continuance of this valuable feature of our annual meetings.

Some of the most interesting discussions we have ever had developed out of the answers given to inquiries from the question box and I urge the free use of this valuable avenue of information.

The Executive Committee.

To those of my executive board who were present at our sessions, who have had the good work at heart and devoted their time and money for the good cause, let me express my heartfelt appreciation, and I hope the same enthusiasm will follow their entire term of office. To those who were not present, I must confess that it was a disappointment. We should understand it is largely a business proposition. Speaking for myself, I should not accept an honor unless I felt I would endeavor to fill the requirements. When a man is shown the courtesy and is invited to give counsel in a society representing his trade's interests, he should put forth all efforts to lend such assistance as lies in his power. This question should be weighed well. We must admit that we all have troubles of our own. None so bad but what may be worse. We should be anxious to lay aside our individual business a short time for this cause. The executive committee is the main machinery of the society. To them is allotted the year's work, and in order to do good, effective work it is absolutely necessary that every director fully intends to do his share at each and every meeting during the term of office, and there ought to be men in our ranks anxious for the opportunity. This year we have arranged a program that I hope will prove interesting and valuable to all our members.

In conclusion, I wish to use this opportunity to express my grateful appreciation of the splendid work done in connection with this event by the St. Louis Florists' Club. President J. J. Beneke, Messrs. Kuehn, Tesson, Oestertag, Schray, Ammann, Byer, Weber, Ellis and Koenig have all to my personal knowledge shown extraordinary interest and applied themselves most industriously to the work assigned them and the happy result is the most complete preparation for this glorious convention.

Secretary Stewart then read his annual report, which was as follows:

Secretary's Report.

In presenting my annual report I take opportunity to congratulate the society, and, through it, the horticultural interests of the country on the freedom during the past year from widespread calamities, such as the coal strike and the express-rate burden, which had in the previous season threatened our prosperity. While not a phenomenal year in any respect, it would seem from the vice-presidents' reports and other sources of information from all sections, that a reasonably satisfactory year has been passed.

Some of the Men Who Made the Convention.

The records of the secretary's office show that this has been the society's experience also.

The annual printed volume of the society's proceedings for the year 1903, a publication of 228 pages, was issued to members in due time and will suffice as a report of our last meeting and its results, and of the enjoyable hours we spent as guests of our indulgent and generous friends of Milwaukee and Chicago, who proved themselves to be masters of the science of hospitality applied with methodical lavishness unequaled in our experience. The records show that twenty-four "certificates of merit," twenty-eight "honorable mentions" and nine "highly commended" diplomas were issued by the judges in the Milwaukee exhibition; and that the gross receipts for space rented to exhibitors were $2,248.62. It is also recorded that one hundred and fifty-nine plant introductions had been reported to the secretary's office during the year. This number included twenty-two carnations, four roses, eighty-two chrysanthemums, six zonal geraniums, three dahlias and forty-two miscellaneous plants.

The total number of members as shown in the printed list for 1903 was nine hundred and three, a net gain of twenty-five over the previous year. Of this number seventy-five were life members. In the interim since the issuance of that report the number of life members has increased about fifty per cent, and our permanent fund has thus received a gratifying accretion. The number of new and reinstated members for 1903 was two hundred and eleven. They are credited to their states as follows: California, Florida, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Canada, Oklahoma and Delaware, one each; District of Columbia and Kansas, two each; Connecticut, Kentucky and Louisiana, three each; Colorado, four; New Jersey, five; Minnesota, seven; Indiana, eight; Missouri, nine; Ohio, ten; Iowa, eleven; Pennsylvania, sixteen; Michigan, eighteen; New York, twenty-two; Wisconsin, twenty-seven; Illinois, fifty-four.

The number of members of 1902 who have failed thus far to respond to due bills for 1903 and the present year is one hundred and fifty-eight, but this number will be reduced somewhat, as usual, by settlements at this meeting.

Deaths have been recorded since our meeting in Milwaukee as follows:

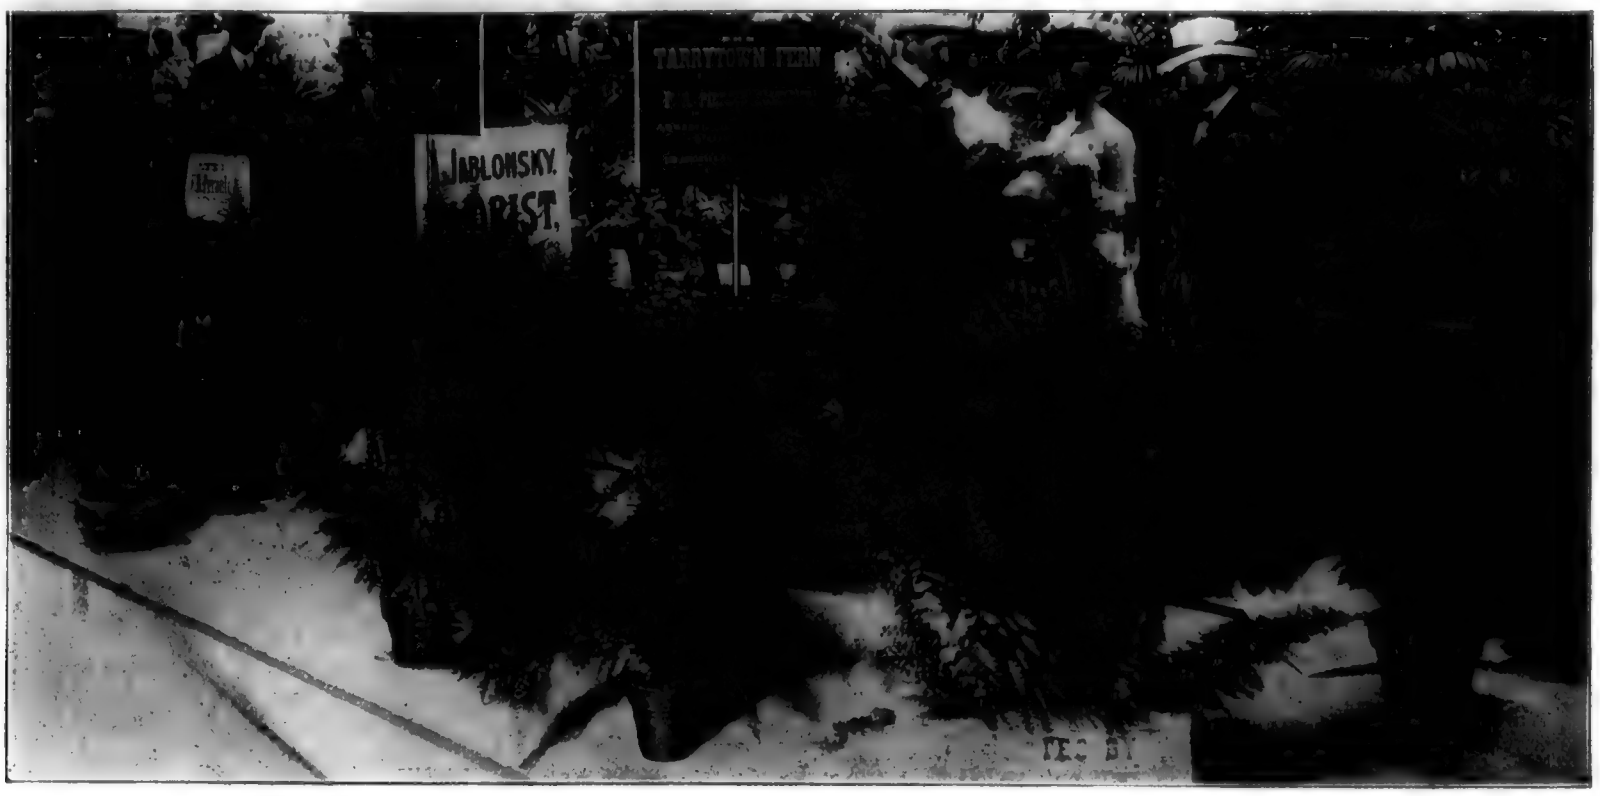
Mary S. Mann, January 11, 1904.
Josiah Hoopes, January 16, 1904.
Philip Gauges, February 1, 1904.
Walter Kreitling, February 29, 1904.
John Young, April 29, 1904.
L. H. Foster, May 31, 1904.
A. Schmitt, June 1, 1904.

Mr. Foster was state vice-president for eastern Massachusetts at the time of his death.

From the foregoing it will appear that, although our organization is numerically and financially strong, we have no increase in membership such as we have a right to expect. A little missionary spirit exercised by our members individually would accomplish more in this direction than all the circulars and press appeals we can make. If all the state vice-presidents should make the same determined effort which has been made by one or two whom I can name, we should have no difficulty in passing the one thousand mark and holding the lead.

The spring meeting of the executive board was held in this city on March 5, 6 and 7, 1904. Our present meeting place, program and other arrangements for the conduct of the business and pleasure of this convention are the result of their deliberations. A number of communications were received and acted upon. Among them was one from the secretary of the Postal Progress League, and a special committee with the secretary as a member was appointed, with instructions to co-operate with the legislative committee in the effort to secure the reforms in postal matters advocated by the League. It was voted to continue the issuing of silver and bronze medals through various horticultural societies as in other years. The subject of the methods of judging and making awards in the trade exhibitions was given long and careful consideration, and in view of the inconvenience and unsatisfactory results generally of the system hitherto prevailing, it was decided to make the change which goes into effect at this meeting, whereby the work of the judges is limited to regularly-entered novelties, and the duty of preparing a detailed list of the exhibits devolves on the superintendent. The secretary was instructed to have all existing records of past meetings of the board copied and bound in such manner as to preserve them in good condition. The subject that occupied the greatest share of the time of the executive board was that of the proposed amendment to the constitution, providing for the enrollment of sections, which had been referred to the board by the last convention. The draft of the proposed amendment as finally adopted by a unanimous vote of the board has been placed before the members of the society in accordance with the constitutional requirement, and awaits the action of this convention. Your secretary ventures to express the hope that this plan, the outcome of many years' study of conditions on the part of those whose duty or privilege it has been to think and to labor for the society's welfare and the advancement of horticulture in this country, will be adopted by the vote of the society when presented on Thursday, thus settling finally, and wisely, I believe, this annually recurring problem.

New plants registered since last report were as follows:



October 17, 1903—Rose Sir Thomas Lipton. This rose had previously been submitted for registration under the name of Leo XIII., which title was withdrawn when it was learned that a rose of that name was already in existence.

November 10, 1903—Chrysanthemums Miss Birnie-Philip, Cziffer, Mrs. Swope and Peter Stuyvesant, by C. D. Beadle.

December 8, 1903—Cannas St. Louis and Milwaukee, by Vaughan's Seed Store.

December 26, 1903—Roses Minnehaha and Hiawatha, by M. H. Walsh.

January 11, 1904—Canna Louisiana, by Conard & Jones Co.

January 11, 1904—Nephrolepis exaltata, var. Scottii, by John Scott.

January 21, 1904—Carnation Daheim, by F. R. Pierson Co.

January 22, 1904—Carnation New Daybreak, by H. Weber & Sons.

February 23, 1904—Roses Cardinal and Enchanter, by John Cook.

March 5, 1904—Rose Gen. MacArthur, by Storrs & Harrison Co.

April 28, 1904—Geranium Telegraph, by Thos. DeVoy & Son.

June 20, 1904—Carnation Pilgrim, by A. L. Thorne.

July 1, 1904—Double Sweet Peas Raritan, Hudson, Delaware and Passaic, by A. C. Zvolanek.

July 18, 1904—Rose Arcadia, by M. H. Walsh. This rose had previously been submitted for registration under the name of Felicity, but this title was withdrawn to avoid possible confusion with another variety in commerce as Felicite-Perpetue.

The admission of Adiantum cuneatum var. Croweanum to registration last year brought out a protest from the late J. H. Ley, that gentleman claiming that this fern was identical with one he had disseminated under the name of A. hybridum. Your secretary procured from Mr. Crowe and Mr. Ley a number of plants each, in various sizes and stages, and placed them in the hands of Mr. Robert Cameron at the Harvard Botanic Garden for comparison under identical culture. After one year's test Mr. Cameron makes the following report, which seems to definitely settle this question:

Botanic Garden Harvard University,
Cambridge, Mass., Aug. 5, 1904.

Dear Mr. Stewart: After growing Adiantum Croweanum and Adiantum hybridum for one year I find that they are quite distinct.

Adiantum Croweanum has longer fronds, grows more upright and has smaller pinnules than hybridum.

Adiantum hybridum does not grow quite as tall as Croweanum, the fronds not quite as straight or upright as Croweanum and are of darker shade of green. The pinnules are much larger than in Croweanum.

Dr. Benjamin Robinson of the Gray Herbarium examined the plants this day and said that they were quite distinct.

Yours respectfully,
ROBERT CAMERON.

The following S. A. F. medal awards have been made through the societies indicated:

Massachusetts Horticultural Society, allotment of 1902, a silver medal to F. R. Pierson Company for Nephrolepis Piersoni, and bronze medal to Wm. Thatcher for seedling dwarf asparagus. Allotment of 1903, silver medal to Joseph Tailby & Son for hybrid calla, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, and bronze medal to David F. Roy for seedling canna, Mrs. E. S. Converse.

American Carnation Society, a silver medal to Richard Witterstaetter for Carnation The Cardinal.

Cincinnati Florists' Society, allotment of 1903, bronze medal to Henry Weber for Carnation Gov. Lowndes. Allotment of 1904, silver medal to R. Witterstaetter for Carnation The Cardinal, and bronze medal to Baur & Smith for Carnation Indianapolis.

Where a medal of same grade has been awarded for the same object by more than one society, the award first reported to the secretary of the S. A. F. has been given the medal, and the subsequent awards have been recognized with a certificate of award in lieu of a medal, according to the rules.

In accordance with instructions from the executive board, the secretary, in cooperation with the other gentlemen appointed, has done what he could to promote an agitation in favor of the proposed postal reforms, but with the usual experience of indifference on the part of the members of the Society, and now that the Postal Progress League proposes to carry the fight into politics, the matter seems to have got beyond our legitimate domain for the present.

Last fall a complete card catalogue of members was prepared and has proved a decided advantage over the roll-book system formerly in use. The large accumulation of society material of considerable value in the secretary's office makes it desirable that an office for its storage and the transaction of the society's business exclusively should be provided, and adequate insurance carried thereon. The exigency having been brought to the attention of the executive board, moderate appropriation to cover the immediate time was made by that body last March, but it would seem that this question is one that should be considered and decided by vote of the whole society.

With gratitude for the cordiality and cheerful assistance so freely given by officers and members during the year, and hearty wishes for ever widening influence and continued prosperity, this report is respectfully submitted.

WM. J. STEWART, Sec'y.

The report of Treasurer H. B. Beatty was presented. The summary was as follows:

Life membership fund: Cash on hand January 1, 1903, $1,924.56; receipts, $403.48; balance January 1, 1904, $2,328.04. Receipts to June 30, 1904, $436.89; balance June 30, $2,764.93.

General fund: Cash on hand January 1, 1903, $2,710.77; receipts, $2,539.80; expenditures, $2,114.56; balance January 1, 1904, $3,136.01. Receipts to June 30, 1904, $1,387; expenditures, $1,541.08; balance June 30, 1904, $2,981.93.

The legislative committee reported, on investigation of some complaints, that all the principal express companies are still adhering to the special plant rate where shipments are properly packed. On certain difficulties at the customs house they asked further time.

The peony committee reported that they found no evidence of prior distribution of the Suzuki & Iida set of Japanese varieties, English names for which were offered for registration some two years ago, and recommended that the English names be adopted as registered, bracketing the Japanese names in cataloging until the trade becomes familiar with the new names. The report was signed by Edwin Lonsdale, J. T. Temple, J. K. M. L. Farquhar, Carl Cropp, G. C. Watson, S. M. Meehan, W. R. Smith and Peter Bissett, and was adopted.

Henry Eichholz presented a report for the committee on standard sizes of plants, as follows:

Standard Sizes of Plants.

The committee reports as follows:

A plant is of standard size, in any sized pot, when it is sufficiently strong

under proper culture for a shift into a larger pot. The root action must be such as to hold the soil firmly and on the other hand should not be pot-bound.

Such plants as petunias, salvias, coleus, chrysanthemums, heliotropes, verbenas, geraniums, dahlias and flowering begonias, in 2½-inch pots, the stem should be not less than three nor more than six inches above the soil, with not less than four leaves. Such stock should be short-jointed, and any undue forcing to obtain specified height would greatly impair their value. The same class of plants in 4-inch pots should be well branched, with the possible exception of chrysanthemums and dahlias, in as much as these are often grown to single stem. They should be not less than six inches in height and of symmetrical form.

Fuchsias and abutilons, the same as the foregoing, in a 2½-inch pot, but in the 4-inch size they should not be less than eight inches in height.

Carnations and roses in 2½-inch pots should be not less than four inches in height and in 4-inch pots should be well branched and not less than five inches in height.

Smilax, Asparagus plumosus and Asparagus Sprengeri in 2½-inch pots should not have less than five growths nor less than five inches in height, with the possible exception of smilax which has been headed back to induce strong root growth, for which three inches in height would suffice. In 4-inch pots not less than ten growths nor less than seven inches in height, except smilax which has been headed back.

Primroses in 2½-inch pots, not less than three inches high and with six to eight leaves. In 4-inch pots, five inches high with twelve to fifteen leaves.

Begonia Rex in 2½-inch pots, not less than three well developed leaves; not less than four nor more than six inches in height.

Cannas, 2½-inch pots, not less than four inches in height, and in 4-inch pots, not less than six inches in height with three well developed leaves.

Ferns in variety, such as are generally used for filling small dishes, vary so in height and style of growth that it is very difficult to define them. In 2½-inch pots, they should average from two and one-half inches in height to five inches, according to the variety. In 4-inch pots, from four inches to eight inches in height. Boston ferns, in 2½-inch pots, not less than three leaves, and in 4-inch pots, not less than eight leaves.

It is impossible to make definite sizes, inasmuch as there is such a wide difference in the habit of growth of many plants of the same species. The individuality is very well marked in such plants as chrysanthemums, begonias and ferns. In mentioning 2½-inch pots, the standard size is the size referred to, namely, two and one-half inches wide and two and one-half inches deep, and not a 2-inch rose pot.

Henry Eichholz,
Jas. S. Wilson,
Richard Vincent, Jr.,
Committee.

Mr. Scott said that, with all due respect to the committee, he considered its work of no value, as sizes required vary so widely in the different sections of the country and because mere size and height bear no relation to health and value. The report was laid on the table.

Mr. Stewart read a report from J. B. Nugent on a standard scale of sizes for roses, but on objection of E. H. Cushman it was referred back to the committee, it developing that Mr. Nugent had prepared the scale at the committee's request but that the other members, Mr. Cushman and Walter Mott, had never seen it. In his report Mr. Nugent pointed out the wide variation in grades now employed and said that all cut flower growers and buyers agree on the desirability of standard grades. He proposed that on all roses other than Beauties the standard grades be adopted as follows:

Specials	30 inches and up
Extra	18 to 24 inches
No. 1	14 to 18 inches
No. 2	12 inches and under

On Beauties as follows:

Specials	40 inches and up
Fancy	30 to 40 inches
No. 1	18 to 24 inches
No. 2	12 to 18 inches
No. 3	12 inches and down

Mr. Gude asked why Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., would not do as well as extra, double extra and extra special!

Several invitations of various sorts were in the hands of the secretary. The only one the society cared to have read was from the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Co. It was referred to the entertainment committee with applause.

A request for the endorsement of G. F. Thompson for appointment as assistant secretary of agriculture was tabled.

A letter was presented from C. S. Sargent, asking subscriptions for the Vilmorin memorial fund. This provoked the liveliest debate of the day, not as to the worthiness of the movement, for that all recognize, but as to the manner of giving. A motion to contribute from the society's funds was thought not to be in keeping with the wishes of the sponsors for the movement and a committee consisting of J. C. Vaughan, Theo. Wirth, A. T. Boddington, Jos. Fuller and Adam Graham was appointed to solicit individual subscriptions. Mr. Gude called attention to the McKinley memorial fund as being equally worthy and more closely identified with our interests.

Otto Koenig spoke on the subject of labor brought up in President Breitmeyer's address and Mr. Scott took the opportunity to say that the address was the most thoughtful ever presented to the society.

Wednesday's Proceedings.

Wednesday morning the convention was nearly an hour late in getting under way. The reports of the several state vice-presidents were presented but not read and Supt. Kuehn's report of the trade exhibition was introduced. The judges were J. F. Sullivan, Edwin Lonsdale and Lewis Ullrich. They made awards as follows:

To Wm. Simpson & Sons, certificate of merit for automobile lawn mower.

A. Rasmussen, honorable mention for balancing sash.

G. M. Garland Co., certificate of merit for device for attaching pipe to purlins.

Herendeen Mfg. Co., boiler highly commended.

Roseville Pottery Co., jardinieres highly commended.

Sperry Mfg. Co., honorable mention for folding plant box.

D. B. Long, certificate of merit for three-color process in printing.

King Construction Co., certificate of merit for truss in roof construction.

C. C. Pollworth Co., glass mender highly commended.

Detroit Pottery Co., certificate of merit for new pot.

A. Dietsch Co., honorable mention for gutter.

Lord & Burnham Co., honorable mention for clamp for attaching sash bars and gutter.

Cahill, Swift Mfg. Co., honorable mention for boiler.

C. A. Kuehn, certificate of merit for wire work.

S. S. Pennock, honorable mention for ribbon novelties.

Reed & Keller, certificate of merit for novelties.

Schloss Bros., honorable mention for ribbon novelties.

M. Rice & Co., honorable mention for several novelties.

Ed. Jansen, honorable mention for novelties.

Lion & Wertheimer, honorable mention for ribbon novelties.

F. R. Pierson Co., silver medal for Tarrytown fern. (This shows one of the inconsistencies of the present method of judging. The committee described this as a "greatly improved Piersoni." Piersoni was given a gold medal two years ago and an equally valuable endorsement last year, yet the form which the committee recognizes as an improvement only gets the silver medal.)

L. Dupuy, highly commended for Hydrangea Hortensia rosea.

W. F. Kasting, certificate of merit for Adiantum Croweanum.

The Templin Co., certificate of merit for Begonia Templinii.

A. G. Greiner, bronze medal for collection of cacti.

The selection of a place of meeting for 1905 being next in order, W. F. Gude spoke for Washington. There were several seconds and the selection was made unanimously.

E. G. Hill then read his paper, "The Development of an American Type of Roses," which provoked a very interesting discussion. A. Jablonsky urged the necessity of eliminating black spot. Mr. O'Mara said that if we get rid of spot by hybridizing with rugosa we shall get spines. Mr. Hill thought not necessarily. Mr. O'Mara said that J. C. Koch, of Baltimore, still maintains that American Beauty is a seedling raised by him and not of French origin, pointing out the experience of his firm with Dinsmore and Mme. Chas. Wood as an example that such might be the case. He would like to see the society help to prove Beauty of American origin, for it certainly has its highest development and use here. W. R. Smith thought it a good matter to let alone. Mr. Lonsdale asked about the use of Bordeaux mixture on roses out of doors. He advocated vigilance rather than varieties which would take care of themselves. Mr. Hill said Bordeaux is extensively used in nurseries, but apparently healthy plants of some varieties sometimes succumb to black spot in a few hours, and said that the present business in roses is insignificant in comparison with what it would be if we had truly dependable varieties.

Replying to a query by J. A. Valentine, Mr. Hill said that the act of pollinating is simple; that the point is to ripen the seed. Climatic conditions have much effect on pollen, but it is not necessary to use it fresh; it may be stored some time, six weeks or so, if kept carefully in a vial or box, not necessarily air-tight. Mr. Hill used a camel's hair brush or a chewed up splinter of pine to apply the pollen. One year he fertilized over 1,500 Brides and Maids and in spite of every care nearly all the hips rotted. The plants have to be kept on the dry side, very carefully syringed and free of red spider. One year 8,000 seeds germinated, almost all; the next year, with equal care only one-fourth germinated. E. D. Smith, Wm. Scott and several others spoke and Mr. Hill was given a hearty vote of thanks.

George Klehm's paper on bulb growing in Illinois was read by the secretary and briefly discussed, after which J. C. Vaughan was introduced to read a paper on "The Ideal Employe." He began by quoting from Hubbard's "letter to Garcia" and closed by quoting his later article to employes, "Get Out or Get in Line." The rest of the address was on that order, the speaker holding that "Do it now" is a truly talismanic motto for those who wish to achieve success. Industry, loyalty and discretion were discussed as essential attributes of the ideal employe, the speaker illustrating, as he said, from his own experience.

The address provoked a very lively and interesting discussion. Benj. Hammond and several others commended it in highest terms and endorsed the theories advanced, but J. A. Valentine took issue with the statement of the essayist that it is the duty of employes to report errors of fellow employes; he said that is "knocking," and all the world hates a "knocker." But Patrick O'Mara brought out the laugh when he said that according to the ideas of Mr. Hubbard, Mr. Vaughan and others, the ideal employe would be deaf, couldn't hear the whistle blow to quit work, and dumb, so he couldn't talk of the business on the outside. He told a story to illustrate the difference in what employers expect from a man, and said that "Like master, like man" applies in this case; where you find the ideal employe, not far do you have to search for the ideal employer. He advised the complainants of the Elbert Hubbard school to put that in their pipes and smoke it. Carmody called for an essay, "The Ideal Employer," at the next convention. Mr. Vaughan was given a hearty vote of thanks.

The visit to the brewery was set for Thursday afternoon.

The matter of procedure in case of no election by the first ballot on Thursday was brought up by W. F. Gude, who had been reading the constitution and found it silent on that point. It provoked a very lively debate, with the consensus of opinion that, should an event ever arise, it would be proper to proceed to a second ballot.

Wm. Scott nominated Lewis Ullrich for president; seconded by F. H. Kramer. Robert Craig nominated J. C. Vaughan, with several seconds.

W. F. Kasting nominated J. R. Freeman, of Washington, for vice president; seconded by G. H. Cook. W. R. Smith nominated J. R. Small, Jr., but it developed that he is not a member of the Washington Florists' Club and was not last year a member of the S. A. F.

J. G. Esler nominated J. F. Sullivan for secretary; seconded by E. G. Hill. Edwin Lonsdale nominated W. J. Stewart; seconded by Mr. Manda.

H. B. Beatty was the only nominee for treasurer.

On roll call the following state vice-presidents were named: California, H. Plath; Colorado, J. A. Valentine; District of Columbia, Peter Bissett; Northern Illinois, P. J. Hauswirth; Indiana, Irwin Bertermann; Iowa, Theo. Ewald; Louisiana, H. Papworth; Maryland, R. Vincent, Jr.; Eastern Massachusetts, W. W. Edgar; Western Michigan, Henry Smith; Northern Michigan, Wm. Weber; Missouri, F. J. Fillmore; Western New York, Geo. McClure; Eastern New York, F. H. Traendly; North Carolina, J. M. Lamb; Northern Ohio, Jas. Eadie; Southern Ohio, H. M. Altick; Pennsylvania, W. T. Bell; Wisconsin, W. A. Kennedy.

Ladies' Day.

Wednesday was ladies' day and a very large number enjoyed the hospitalities provided. In the morning two games were bowled at the Palace alleys, with so many competitors that it was 1:30 before the final pin fell, with Chicago at the head, represented by Mrs. Hauswirth and Mrs. Kreitling. Lunch was served at the alleys. In the afternoon five special cars, decorated, took the ladies and many gentlemen to O'Fallen park, where another luncheon was served, the party returning to town at seven o'clock. Before leaving the park three cheers were given for the St. Louis Florists' Club and three more for the ladies of the club, for every one was delighted at their hospitality. The cheers were proposed by President Breitmeyer and the ladies then gave three cheers for him.

Thursday's Proceedings.

There was a large attendance, the first business being the appointment of Messrs. Elser, Altick and Ammann to conduct the election. The Australian ballot system was used, the polls open two hours.

Secretary Stewart then read J. A. Pettigrew's paper on "The Improvement of Public and Private Grounds." This was warmly received and was endorsed and supplemented by Messrs. W. R. Smith, Scott, Vaughan, Fulmer, and D. D. England of Winnipeg.

The committee on standard sizes of bulbs and cut flowers presented a report signed by E. H. Cushman, F. J. Michell and John Nugent, Jr. In it was incorporated Mr. Nugent's scale for roses presented on Tuesday and referred back to the committee. In addition, the committee reported that the sizes of imported bulbs are too well known to require change. The grading of canna and dahlia roots was deemed impracticable. Grades for gladioli were recommended as follows: Five to seven inches in circumference, four to five, and three to four. Mr. Scott renewed his protest as to impracticability of such grades and the report was tabled.

J. A. Peterson read his paper on "Indoor Blooming Plants" and was given a vote of thanks.

The amendment to the constitution, to provide for sections, was taken up and provoked the liveliest debate of the convention. Opinion was unanimous as to the desirability of the object, but views differed widely as to the practicability of the method proposed. A motion to adopt was declared defeated, but W. R. Smith called for a division which resulted in defeat twenty-two to thirty. Many present not voting.

The question box filled the interim until the result of the election was declared, which was as follows:

For president, J. C. Vaughan, 166; Lewis Ullrich, 99;

For vice-president, J. R. Freeman, 246.

For secretary, J. F. Sullivan, 115; W. J. Stewart, 148.

For treasurer, H. B. Beatty, 257.

The judges of trade display asked leave to correct an error, and amend their report by giving honorable mention to Bayersdorfer & Co. for rainbow baskets.

G. L. Grant, J. L. Dillon and J. F. Sullivan were appointed a committee on final resolutions, and the convention adjourned.

Breitmeyer Gets Diamond.

In recognition of the able and impartial manner in which ex-President Breitmeyer had presided, his friends in the society presented him with a handsome diamond stud.

For Thursday afternoon there was the shooting tournament, the trip to the brewery and the meeting of the carnation society. For Friday, deferred business, addresses by eminent visitors, the garden party at Shaws Garden and a trip to Tower Grove park.

President's Reception.

The president's reception Tuesday evening was under the management of J. J. Beneke. Several hundred people passed the receiving line, after which short entertainment was provided, part professional, the quartette being excellent. J. W. Rodgers, of Cincinnati, sang most acceptably, and Miss Pearl Fulmer, of Des Moines, received a warm welcome. The Koenig family octette also sang and J. J. Beneke appeared in black face, being introduced as St. Louis' Lew Dockstader. He made a great hit. Later in the evening refreshments were served.

THE TRADE EXHIBITION.

The trade exhibits, if they did not occupy quite so much space as at Milwaukee, were just as numerous and of equal diversity and quality. Several of the large plantsmen did not exhibit such quantities of stock as last year; that was the only feature in which the display was not the best in the history of the society. The supply men made very pretentious displays and showed a wealth of novelties of value to the storekeepers. These remarkable exhibits should alone compensate the members of this branch of the craft for attendance. The plant displays were numerous, of uniform high quality, and an opportunity was afforded for the examination of several fine novelties. Scottii was the conspicuous feature among these because of the great size of the exhibit, but the others were by no means overlooked. The building material was less of a feature than usual, partly due to a location away from the main body of exhibits, but a good showing was made nevertheless. Supt. Kuehn is entitled to praise for the able way in which he handled the exhibition. Nearly every exhibit was in place Monday evening and the arrangement left no room for criticism. Following are the exhibitors, with very brief mention of their wares:

S. S. Pennock, Philadelphia, made a very large display of ribbons, including all grades and colorings, and many novelties in ties, etc., also crepe papers, sheaves and other supplies.

Ed. Jansen, New York, showed a fine line of baskets, roping, wreaths, etc.

D. B. Long, Buffalo, had his various specialties.

C. S. Ford, Philadelphia, had a line of letters, bells and staple supplies.

M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, occupied 1,200 square feet of space and Mr. Eschner had three assistants in handling their very complete line. Besides all the staples in supplies and ribbons they had a large number of novelties. A bridal arch, gates and kneeling stool was a feature. Bay trees of ruscus were noted. Among the useful things in the ribbon department was what is called Empress silk ribbon, for tying pot covers and many other purposes. There were also many new pot covers, screens, etc.

AN AMERICAN TYPE OF ROSES.

BY E. G. HILL, RICHMOND, IND.

[Read before the Society of American Florists at St. Louis, August 17, 1904.]

By the question implied in the topic assigned me by the executive committee of this society, "The Development of an American Type of Roses," we may infer that there is need of largely supplementing our present list of roses as grown in this country. Nothing can be truer than that the general rose grower feels this need and it is to the careful hybridist and the persevering raiser of seedling roses suited to our climate, that we must look for this supplemental list.

We need roses that will bloom in our grounds and gardens during the summer and autumn. Climatic conditions vary so greatly in our country that it would seem necessary that several types should be brought out, adapted to the various conditions and requirements of the different sections.

The Pacific Coast Supplied.

It may be remarked in passing that California and the Pacific coast states have an ample source of supply for all practical purposes in the fine productions of the rosarians of England and the continent of Europe. The varieties that succeed and flourish in the sections named do remarkably well, also, in the South Atlantic and Gulf states, hence an effort to originate a new type for these particular localities would seem an unnecessary undertaking, although there can, and will, be improvements over such sorts as now lend charm and beauty to the homes and gardens of the sections named above. Some fine additions have been made the past few years, but it will be a long time before such grand old sorts as Ophirie, Lamarque, Solfaterre, Reine Marie Henriette and Mme. Alfred Carriere are supplanted as climbers in the Pacific section, to say nothing of the large number of grand bush varieties which flourish with such vigor and produce such quantities of flowers.

The European rose hybridist, assisted by a kind Providence, has placed at the disposal of the states of Washington and Oregon, all that could be desired in the way of fine roses; no section of Europe produces finer hybrid perpetuals and hybrid teas than do these two states.

If you would see Xavier Olibo, Louis Van Houtte, Ulrich Brunner and other choicest hybrid perpetuals, together with a sight of the finest La France that soil can produce—then go to the Lewis & Clark Exposition a year hence, in Portland, Oregon. I am sure that you will not be disappointed.

Essentials of an American Type.

That we need a new type of rose for the section north of Virginia and Tennessee calls for no argument whatever. One of the first requirements of the type is a vigor of constitution that will withstand the ravages of black-spot, or fungus, which is the first cause for failure in our efforts to grow roses successfully in the northern section of our country. A few varieties succeed, but only a very few thrive and bloom as they should; there are a limited number of favored localities where roses do very well in the north, but they are few and very far between.

The second requirement is a resistant texture of bloom, stronger than that possessed by most of the hybrid perpetuals, hybrid teas, and teas.

It is well settled in your essayist's mind that the two qualities mentioned above are absolutely necessary to the new type that we are seeking, if it is to be of sterling value, and with these must be united the third quality, a hardiness which will take it uninjured through our rigorous winters.

The Method of Procedure.

How shall we proceed in order to secure a disease-resisting rose, with substantial texture of petal in its flowers, that shall withstand the fierce onslaught of the sun in our hot, dry climate and possessing a degree of hardiness that will insure life through our severe winters? This is the problem before us.

At first glance it would seem an impossible undertaking, for where shall we turn for the blood to so reinvigorate our standard roses, and who among us will undertake to devote time and service and brain to an undertaking of such doubtful remuneration and yet so laudable?

Or will the lovers of roses continue to be satisfied with the partial success achieved by using present varieties and by various expedients producing a more or less artificial result, not at all adequate to the expense and labor bestowed.

Rugosa the Vigorous Blood.

There are a number of distinct species of roses that should, and no doubt will, be tried for this particular line of hybridizing. First I would name Rosa rogusa. While this species might not

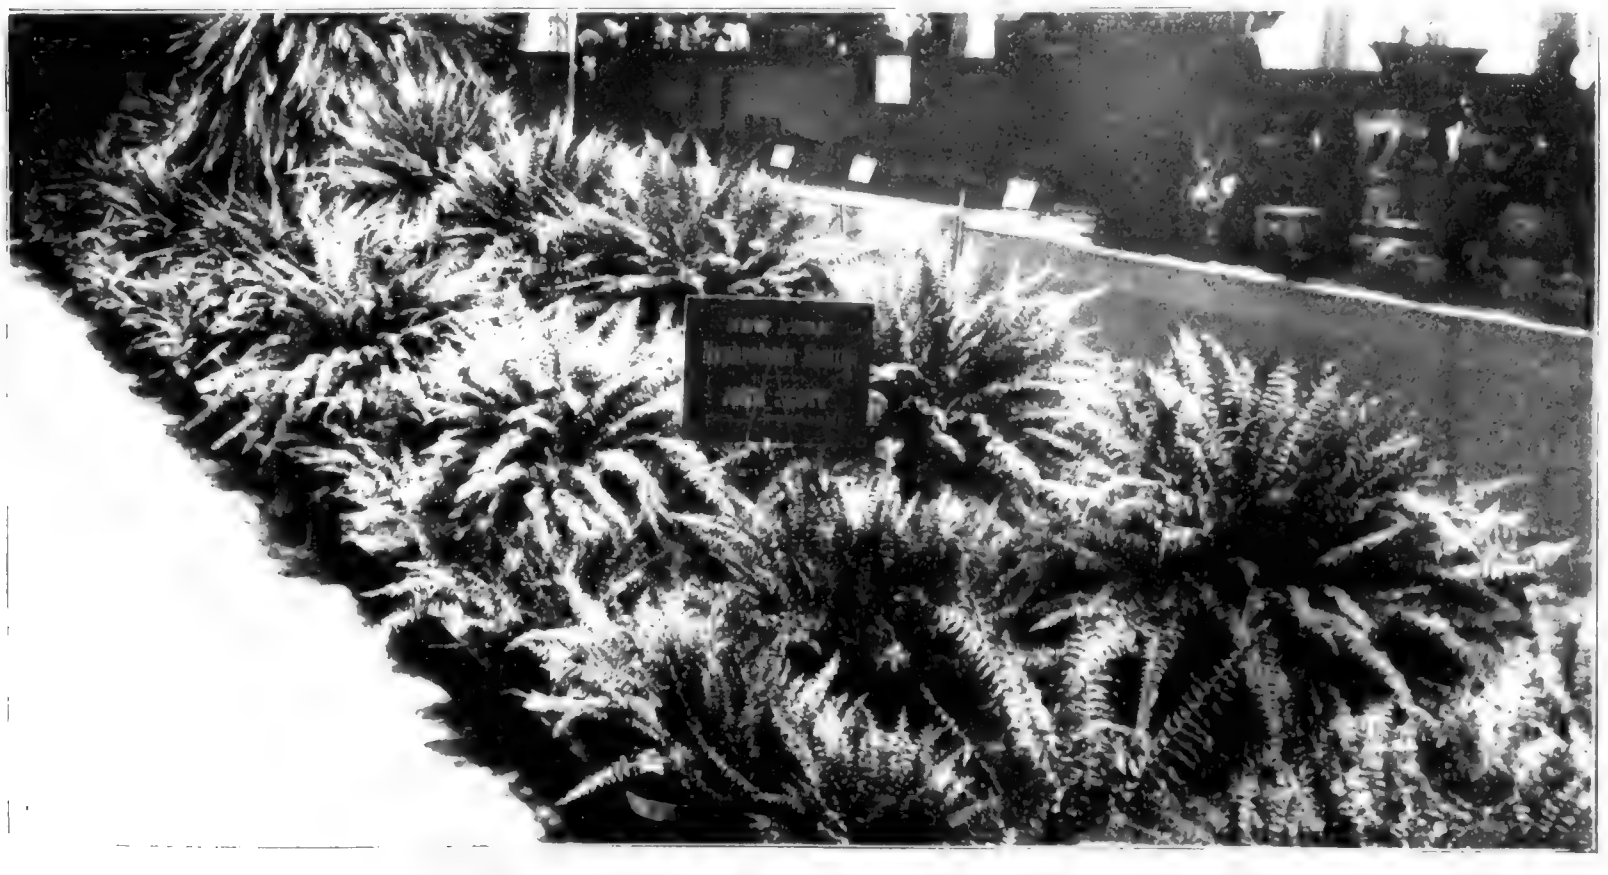
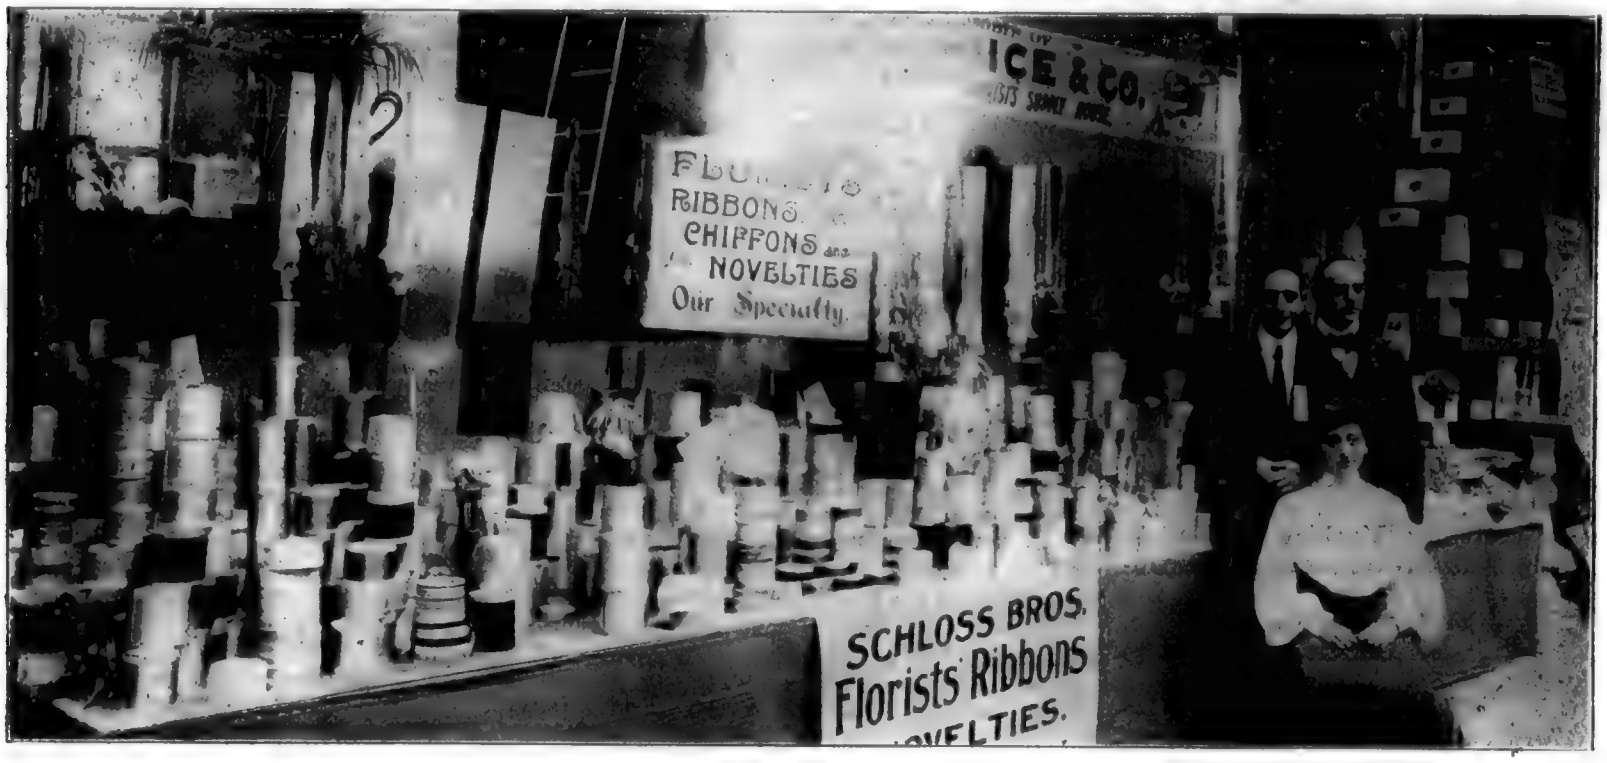
The Method of Procedure.



How shall we proceed in order to secure a disease-resisting rose, with substantial texture of petal in its flower that shall withstand the fierce slaught of the sun in our hot, dry mate and possessing a degree of hardiness that will insure life through severe winters? This is the problem before us.

At first glance it would seem an impossible undertaking, for where shall we turn for the blood to so reinvigorate our standard roses, and who among us will undertake to devote time and service and brain to an undertaking of such doubtful remuneration and yet so laudable?



Or will the lovers of roses continue to be satisfied with the partial success achieved by using present varieties by various expedients protecting a more or less artificial result, not at all adequate to the expense and labor bestowed?

Rugosa the Vigorous Blood.

There are a number of distinct species of roses that should, and no doubt will, be tried for this particular line of hybridizing. First I would name R. rugosa. While this species might give us texture of bloom, there could be no doubt but that its offspring would have disease-resisting foliage and a probability of hardiness sufficient to withstand our winters. This should be tried persistently, using pollen from our best hybrid perpetuals, hybrid teas and teas, using the rugosa as the seed-bearing plant, and, while it would require a long line of crossing and crossing back, I have little doubt but that from this source can finally be secured our coveted type, which would supply our northern gardens with an ideal rose.

Bruant, Cochet, Muller, Wintzer and others have made a start in this direction. We have Bruant's cross between R. rugosa and Niphetos, named Mme. Georges Bruant. This variety has the lengthened bud of Niphetos, showing distinctly the influence of the tea variety.

Blanc double de Coubert is a charming shrub for lawn decoration and a most promising subject for cross-fertilization. Conrad F. Meyer is a variety to which has been transmitted much of the fullness and color of the male parent, which is said to be Gloire de Dijon. Atropurpurea, one of Geo. Paul's hybrid rugosas, will furnish the dark tints in any color scheme devised or planned. Sir Thomas Lipton, an American hybrid introduced by Conard & Jones Co., is said to possess many excellent characteristics.

I mention the above believing them to be the most useful of the rugosa hybrids and having made the most distinct breaks from rugosa proper. Other rugosa hybrids are Philemon Cochet, Alice Aldrich, Belle Poitevine, Mme. Worth, Calocarpa, Rose Apples, Chedane Guinnoiseau, Christopher Cochet and Pierre Leperdrieux, and these are not all. They are enumerated to show what has been done with this type and as a reminder that the hybridist need not go back to the original but can use some of the fine breaks already made.

Immunity from Disease.

I wish to reiterate the previous statement, that I firmly believe that immunity from the disease known as blackspot must come through an infusion of rugosa blood, and I would further state that your essayist is not speaking from practical experience in the matter of crossing the present popular varieties of roses with the rugosas, as his efforts have been more largely made in trying to secure new sorts suitable for forcing under glass.

Other species of roses may offer as fruitful a field for the hybridist as the rugosa, and why not try what can be done with our native American species? The climbing Prairie types were secured from this source, and they certainly possess hardiness in connection with a fair amount of fullness, two distinct qualities essential to the new type.

Wichuraiana and Crimson Rambler.

American hybridists have given us many charming Wichuraiana crosses and fine results have crowned the efforts of Messrs. Van Fleet, Manda, Walsh, Perkins and Dawson. The serious question often propounded is, are they hardy? Sometimes they winter perfectly and again an occasional season finds them killed back severely. Your essayist has not had long enough experience with outdoor-grown stock of Dorothy Perkins, Farquhar, W. C. Egan, Manda's Triumph and other Wichuraiana crosses to speak with certainty as to their hardiness, but he believes that it is affirmed of them by their raisers.

Crimson Rambler is at once the most unique and the most satisfactory rose grown in the northern half of our country. No other rose can dispute with it the right to a first place in general popularity with the American people, for porch and pillar purposes. The wide dissemination of the rose, its tremendous sale the present season and the prospective demand for future planting, exceeds that of any other rose introduced into American gardens.

Experiments at Richmond with this variety tend to strengthen the opinion that a few years will give us white, blush and intermediate shades in this particular interesting rose. To be sure, we have had Aglia, Thalia and Euphrosyne, but between these and Turner's Crimson Rambler there is a wide difference of character.

Years of Work Needed.

To secure the new type of garden rose outlined will necessitate careful, painstaking labor extending over a long period of time. A year or two will not bring it to us. It has taken a full third of a century to bring the hybrid tea to its present stage of development. It is a long stride from Antoine Verdier, Mlle. Bonnaire and La France to the family as it is composed today. It might be mentioned in passing that the three varieties named above were the result of accidental insect pollination. The evolution of the hybrid tea class is mentioned simply to show that time and patience are prime factors in creating and perfecting a new type.

We, the members of this society, might earnestly question as to how we can best aid in a consummation so earnestly desired, so necessary to the widening popularity of the rose in our American gardens. Enthusiastic personal effort must be the groundwork of the movement, which may be encouraged by the award of the society's medal to meritorious seedlings whose constitution and texture of bloom make them desirable additions to our outdoor roses. As indicated previously, the efforts at Richmond have all been made in the interest of winter blooming sorts and, while this has been the aim, several very promising varieties other than forcing sorts have been produced which are now being tested as garden varieties.

A Case of Dereliction.

The florists of America have been notoriously lax as a profession in their efforts to improve the rose, nearly all our finest varieties being of foreign origin and, while we may rightly covet the honor of producing something fine and grand, we have been exceedingly blameworthy in sanctioning the act which robbed an eminent French rosarian of his honors, when we allowed the renaming of Mme. Ferdinand Jamain, calling it American Beauty.

We have the genius and the talent to produce an American type of rose if our members will but apply themselves to the task at hand. Shall we attempt this work or shall we go on in the old way, trusting to luck and to the products of foreign skill to supply us with roses suitable for our own gardens and homes?

AMERICAN BULB GROWING.

BY GEORGE KLEHM, ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, ILL.

[Read before the Society of American Florists at St. Louis, August 17, 1904.]

Our experience in the cultivation of bulbs on a moderate scale at Arlington Heights, Ill., began in 1885, with the ordinary kinds of tulips which are used for forcing purposes, together with about half a dozen kinds of narcissus.

We selected a low, well drained, deep black loam for the purpose. The ground was heavily manured in April with the ordinary manure from the horses and cows, deeply plowed and kept cultivated during the summer, until the middle of August, when planting commenced, and by the first of September was finished. In the beginning we grew everything in long rows fifteen inches apart, and bulbs of the first size were spaced three inches. Afterward we changed to growing in beds four feet wide with rows nine inches apart and spaced three inches, that is, for the first size. The stock was graded into firsts, seconds and thirds. The average depth when planted would be three inches to the top of the bulb. Just before Thanksgiving day a mulching of short manure, three inches thick, was spread evenly over the whole surface, about a third of which was removed in the first week of April.

The flowers were all removed just before opening, care being taken to leave the stems as long as possible. The growth was encouraged and maintained so as to ripen the bulbs thoroughly before digging. Some kinds, such as Artus, Duc Van Thol, La Reine and Pottebakker, occasionally suffered in the hot spells of weather which often happen in early May, while such kinds as Kaizerskroon, Cottage Maid and Yellow Prince were not in the least affected. Neither were the Parrots, Gloria Solis, Gesneriana, or the other species we grew. After digging, the bulbs were put in trays about three inches thick and placed in an open shed until dry, when they were cleaned, graded and placed in dark storage till planting time.

As regards the size and quality of the bulbs, compared with those imported, the majority of the varieties did not produce as large bulbs, but in the earliness and ease of forcing the size of the flower and length of the stem when grown under the same conditions, but little if any differences were observable. Our crops of bulbs for several years averaged more than 100,000.

Of the narcissus we grew the double varieties, as Von Sion, Orange and Sulphur Phœnix and Poeticus. Of the single, Bicolor, Tenby, early and late Poeticus and jonquils. These were given about the same treatment as the tulips, except that as a rule they were not taken out of the soil until about the first of July, when the largest bulbs were selected for forcing and the smaller ones were planted after the tulips. For some years we grew quantities of Von Sion and the single poeticus for cutting out of doors. Some years they were profitable enough; other years they did not more than clear expenses.

We have been growing lily of the valley extensively for ten years. They are planted in heavily manured ground, as soon as the spring opens, in rows two feet apart and the pips are spaced two inches. They are cultivated and kept free from weeds for three seasons and heavily mulched with manure each fall about the first of December. As soon as the foliage ripens, or after the first frost, about the first of October, they are plowed out about five inches deep and shaken out with forks, then carted into a shed open on all sides, but with a tight roof. After lying thinly for a few days, they are turned over and afterwards sorted into first size for forcing, and second and third for planting. Our first planting for forcing commences the first of December, when we have our first crop of flowers at Christmas. And, contrary to newly imported pips, those of our own growing give abundant foliage at all times, and the quality of the flowers, both in size and substance and the number of bells, far surpass any imported. The price realized is on an average one-third more, and sometimes one-half more, than can be obtained for the general kind of lily of the valley.

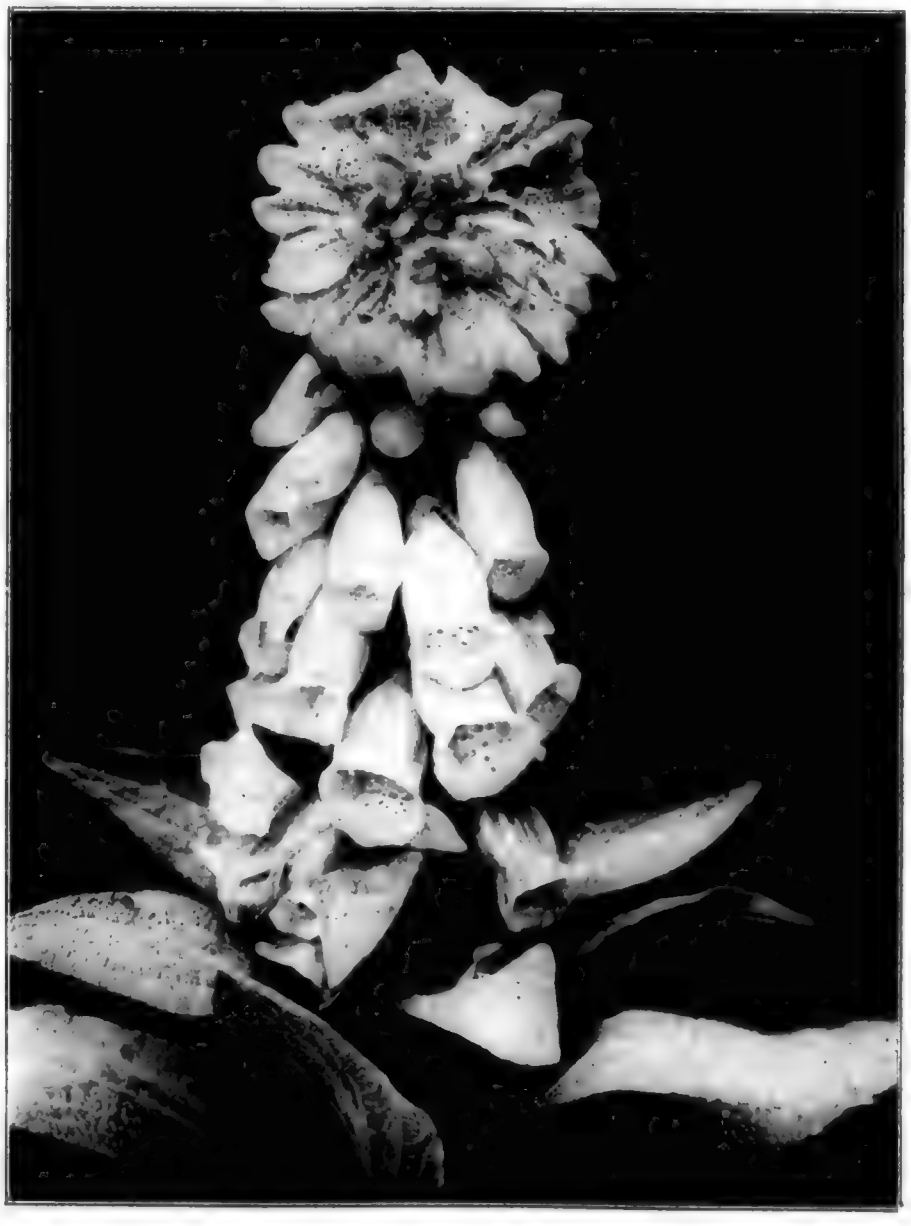
We have discontinued the growing of tulips and narcissi for several reasons. The demand for flowers from forced bulbs has materially decreased during the last eight years and the decrease in prices consequently followed. The rapid increase of our nursery business demands all our attention. The price of labor, together with the difficulty in obtaining that of reliability, are the principal reasons for our not continuing the work. We are satisfied, however, that where suitable land can be had and where manure and labor can be readily obtained, tulips and narcissi can be made to yield a moderate profit.

THE IDEAL EMPLOYE.

We regret very much that we are not able to present the very interesting essay, "The Ideal Employe," not having received same, although a copy was requested.

INDOOR BLOOMING PLANTS.

BY J. A. PETERSON, CINCINNATI, OHIO.



[Read before the Society of American Florists at St. Louis, August 18, 1904.]

The subject assigned to me is indeed a very exhaustive one, to which I do not feel able to do justice before such an intelligent body as the Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists. I will therefore confine myself to a few plants, of which I make a specialty, and which I hope will be acceptable. And first on my list, because of its popularity, I will place Hydrangea Otaksa.

Hydrangea Otaksa.

This is, perhaps, next to the Easter lily, one of the most popular as well as one of the most profitable plants grown for the Easter trade. Outside of being an enormous water-drinker, it is of very easy culture. As a decorative plant it has few equals; as an outdoor decorative plant, and for porches, it lasts longer in bloom and gives better satisfaction than any other flowering plant.

Plants for forcing, to be most successful, if you desire fine specimens, should be grown in pots. Propagate from the young, soft, side shoots, or those that come from the bottom of the plant, as early as January, February or March. They may also be propagated later in the season, as late as June or July, if you desire single plants with only one bloom. More bushy plants are, however, preferable, as your customers will seldom be satisfied with one large bloom, but will prefer the more shapely plants. As to culture, insert the cuttings in the sand, press firmly, syringe freely and shade from the direct rays of the sun. A temperature of 60 degrees Fahrenheit should be maintained. They should remain in the sand about three weeks, to become strongly rooted, then pot into 3-inch pots; use a light sandy loam; place in a light, cool house, near the glass, 50 to 55 degrees at night; shade for a few days; as soon as established remove the shade. They may remain here till about the 1st of May.

A Malformed Spike of Digitalis Purpurea.

To make large plants in one season, from cuttings, put three plants in a 5-inch pot or five plants in a 6-inch pot. These may now be plunged outdoors in the full sun, where they will grow slowly, as a sturdy, dwarf plant is what is most desired. As late as July 1 you may pinch them back. This will produce several shoots, all of which should be removed, except two to each plant; you will then have six shoots in a 5-inch pot or ten shoots in a 6-inch pot. Remove all other growth. Give water as required during the summer months. By the 1st of September these plants may be repotted, the 5-inch to 7-inch pots, the 6-inch to 8-inch pots, and again plunged outdoors in the full sun. Use a good, strong loam, three parts loam to one part sand, and two parts old rotted cow manure. Pot firmly.

By October you will have nice plants from five to six inches high. At this period water should be gradually withheld, so as to ripen the wood, for if they are not properly ripened you cannot expect good results. As soon as danger of frost comes, remove to a cool house or frame and water sparingly. If you can allow your plants a slight frost they will be greatly benefited by same, but here one must be careful not to freeze too hard. Also, if frozen, protect from the sun; syringe overhead to remove the ice formed. This is, however, a dangerous practice for inexperienced hands.

From now on give very little or no water except when flagging. This is the time to put away in winter quarters. A cool frame, a cool house or under the bench in a violet house will do. Here they may rest until wanted for forcing. As Easter comes late this coming year, namely, April 23, it will be time enough to start the forcing after Christmas; the first week in January will do. Start the plants by giving them a good watering; syringe frequently and then allow them to stand until they are fairly dry again. A temperature of 55 degrees will do for the first two or three weeks; then you may increase the temperature to 55 or 60 degrees at night. Give plenty of ventilation as required, but no draught, as the growth will be very soft and tender. Remove all side shoots and those that come from the bottom. These may be used as cuttings. Remember that only the terminal shoots will flower with any degree of certainty. As the plants grow stronger they should have plenty of room. When they have made the fourth pair of leaves you can begin to see the embryo buds; this will take about six weeks. From this time on plenty of water should be given, all they will drink, and that is a great deal. As soon as the flowers begin to develop and show color a watering with manure-water twice a week will be greatly beneficial. The latter part of March they will begin to show color. This is the time to increase the ventilation, night and day, and keep them cool to harden them. Water freely, also give a very light shade on the glass to keep the flowers from burning.

Hydrangeas grown as above described will need no stakes and, as these are unsightly in any plant, their use should be avoided as much as possible. If plants are wanted for May and June, for porch and outdoor garden decoration, they should be kept dormant in a cool place and started on only as required. If a blue hydrangea is desired, use iron filings mixed with the soil, about a small handful to an 8-inch pot; also watering with alum dissolved in water will be found to produce the desired result.

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine.

I now wish to call your attention to another highly decorative plant, which, in my estimation, stands without a peer, the incomparable Begonia Gloire de Lorraine. This begonia, by far the most useful and truly magnificent of all begonias, is a hybrid between Begonia Socotrana and B. Dregei. It was raised by that celebrated horticulturist, M. Lemoine, of Nancy, France.

To derive the best results this plant should be propagated from leaf-cuttings. Select only good, mature leaves. Take the leaf, including the stalk, and insert the latter about one-half its length in the sand-bed; press firmly. By all means do not let the leaf rest flat on the sand, as they damp easily. This operation should be done carefully. Water sparingly only on bright days. If possible, a temperature of from 65 to 70 degrees Fahrenheit should be maintained in the sand-bed at all times. In about eight weeks the leaves should be sufficiently rooted to be potted into 2-inch pots.

The small "corms" that form at the base of the leaves should also appear. Take care not to break or otherwise injure these in potting, as they form the foundation of the future plant.

For the first potting use equal parts of loam and sand. After potting place in a rather dry house, close to the glass, where a light shade should be given. Watering should be done very sparingly from now on by watering each plant separately and only when very dry. Keep rather on the dry side than too wet. Also, deep potting should be avoided.

They may remain in 2-inch pots from January and February, the time of potting, until June, at which time you should have nice little stuff, with from three to five shoots, if propagated from leaf-cuttings. Then your trouble is all over. Repot directly into 4-inch pots and from now on they will continue to grow rapidly; more water may also be given, as needed. More shoots will also appear from the bottom of the plants as they grow stronger. Place in a cool, airy house, ventilating top and bottom; also well shaded at this time of the year. A good plan is to put a few tobacco stems between the pots, as a preventive of green aphis. Water may now be given more freely, as you can almost see the plants growing.

About August 15 to September 1 the final repotting will be in order. For compost use three parts good, turfy loam, two parts sand and one part very old manure. Use 6-inch or 7-inch azalea pots, according to the size of your plants. One plant is sufficient for each pot, if you have plants propagated from leaf cuttings.

I will here say that this plant can also be propagated easily from cuttings during May, June and July, but these will not make as fine, sturdy plants as the above method. They will, however, make nice little plants for 3-inch pots for the holidays, suitable for jardinieres or table decoration. If large plants are desired from cuttings you will have to put from five to eight plants in a 6-inch or 7-inch pot in order to be properly furnished. Then, again, one plant in a pot always looks better than where a lot are massed together.

During the summer the plants should be pinched back, each shoot to two or three joints, so as to form shapely plants. This should be discontinued after August. In pinching this way you not only have no flowers during summer, but you also insure a stronger growth. About September 1 they are ready for tying. This may be done by using one stake in the center of the plant, looping each shoot loosely to same with raffia. This should be done as often as required. By November 1 the first blooms will appear. These should be removed if you desire a lot for late flowering.

Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is not only useful as a single specimen but it may also be used very effectively in table decorations. Small plants in 3-inch pots are very effective for this purpose. It is also very useful for floral designs. Let me say that Begonia Gloire de Lorraine is a plant that has come to stay.

Begonia Turnford Hall, a white variety with a pleasing shade of delicate pink, as in the appleblossom, is a sport of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine which appeared a short time ago in the London markets. It gives promise of being a grand companion to Gloire de Lorraine and will be quite as useful as its parent. It will, in all probability, be in the market next season.

Other Good Subjects.

Among desirable plants for indoor culture I would also mention Azalea Indica, with its bright and delicate shades of pink, white and red, which can be had in flower from Christmas till Easter. Poinsettia pulcherrima, with its dazzling scarlet bracts, is especially useful for Christmas decorations. Euphorbia Jacquiniæflora has exceedingly pretty racemes of orange-colored flowers.

Primula obconica and its newer hybrids, from white to dark pink, and fringed, is also very pretty, of easy culture and gives great satisfaction. Cyclamens, in white, pink and scarlet, also the newer fringed types called Papilio, on account of their butterfly appearance, are among the most useful and satisfactory. Lilium Harrisii and L. longiflorum no commercial florist can do without, as they are equally desirable for all decorative purposes.

Other plants of special merit I would like to mention are primulas, calceolarias, cinerarias, acacias, ericas, epacris, epiphyllum, dendrobium, cattleyas, odontoglossums, phalænopsis—in fact, this list might be extended indefinitely, as there are so many beautiful and desirable plants that could be considered under this subject, "Indoor Flowering Plants."

Bowling.

Chicago gets the Kasting championship cup for this year; also the Anheuser-Busch cups which become their property; also the Beatty cup which must be won twice, and silver match safes for each member of the team from Beatty.

St. Louis wins the Harry Balsley silver pitcher for second highest total; also five watch fobs for individual members.

Cleveland gets five steins from Holton & Hunkel Co., for third highest total.

For the ladies the silver vase for highest total went to Mrs. Hauswirth, the cut glass bowl to Mrs. Kreitling.

The championship medal for men was won by James Stevens of the Chicago team.

There were numerous other prizes;

BOSTON.

The Market.

Business has been quite good during the past week, flowers generally clearing out well. Some very nice American Beauties are coming in, prices varying from $6 to $16 per 100. Carnots and Kaiserins clean out well. Brides and Bridesmaids continue rather poor. Carnations of decent quality sell at $2. The supply of outdoor blooms continues small. Asters are not of very good quality. Good whites bring 75 cents to $1, colored ones also selling quite well. Sweet peas are coming badly spotted and are practically over for the season. Gladioli continue in fair supply. Lilium speciosum album sells at $3 to $4 per 100, Lilium auratum averaging about $6. Prices of fern and asparagus remain about the same. A decided scarcity of white flowers seems likely until carnations and chrysanthemums come in.

Various Notes.

The Gardeners' and Florists' Club outing will be held at Nahant, on August 25. The journey will be made by steamer and a shore dinner with all the "fixins" will be one of the attractions.

None of our florists seemed to pluck up enthusiasm enough to essay the journey to St. Louis. Too busy at home and too hot at St. Louis seemed to be the causes. We are sorry the worthy secretary of the S. A. F. O. H. had no delegation to accompany him.

Worcester Conservatories are sending in some very nice Beauties to our market at present.

Boston is crowded with visitors this week with the annual G. A. R. encampment and the city is gayly decorated. Some of the decorations in the public gardens are in exceedingly bad taste, while some of the bedding out is sufficient to give one the nightmare, but most of the visitors seem pleased with the same.

Continuous rains in the form of thunder showers is causing carnations not housed to spot badly.

The management of the Flower Market posted "To Let" notices the past week in the stalls of members who were in arrears for rent and premiums. Money poured freely into the treasury as a consequence.

Kenneth Finlayson is out again after a long and painful illness.

E. N. Peirce, of Waverly, came from Maine to attend the G. A. R. Encampment this week.

Henry Hurrell, of Lager & Hurrell, made us a brief call last week. He reported orchid business as first-class.

A. T. Boddington has also been doing Boston and vicinity.

ST. PAUL.

Dear Review:—

For the first time this season we have just now real summer weather, warm, very warm, indeed, and the crop of annuals is coming in heavy lots and sell at any price. Asters are over-plentiful and will become a drug in the market. Good roses are in demand, carnations being no good and are gone to the dogs quite a while. Quite a few of our growers put in more roses, claiming carnations at $1 to $2 per 100 even in midwinter do not pay at all. Enchantress is all the rage just now. They are all putting in quite a few of it. I consider Lawson as the best paying carnation. Its deep striking shade of dark, rose-cerise, lustrous and glowing, affecting and effecting everyone's eye, always finds a willing buyer. We know there are many new ones in the market claiming the same merit. It may be so, but the Spaniard says "Queen sabe! Dias sabe." (Who knows? God knows.)

The twin cities florist outing at Wild Wood, White Bear Lake, Ramsey County, Minn., was a howling success in spite of bad weather, because there isn't a lovelier sheet of water for summer recreation in any of the states. If there is a better one, gentlemen, let me know, please.

Chas. Vogt and Henry Puvogel attended the Saengerfest in Milwaukee, and enjoyed themselves immensely and helped the Saengers to kill the breweries.

Carl Keiper, a good plant grower, also abandoned his place, intending to go west. Good luck.

W. Strehlow, our violet expert, is celebrating to-day, his birthday and engagement to Miss Puvogel. That's a double header and three cheers for Bill.

F. Franke is erecting a new house for violets 16x110. We wish him success.

At L. L. May & Co.'s planting is finished and everything under Foreman F. Gustavson is looking fine.

There is lot more news, of course, but everything has to come to an end, so my letter. Greetingly, yours forever. C. Bussjaeger.

SWEET PEAS.

In the August 4 issue of the Review I saw the questions asked by H. L. H. about sweet peas. Three winters ago I wintered some sweet peas, in what seemed to me an unusual way, considering we never have less than two inches of ice and as many of snow, which is sufficient to kill peas.

About September I planted the seed in a long box containing about four or five inches of soil from alluvial land. They sprouted but the plants did not do well. They would not grow even in the cooler autumn days when garden peas were bearing abundantly. As long as there was life though, I hoped and took care of them.

All during the winter they were only about six to twelve inches high and when the cold snap came, I laid old sacks over them in which we had gotten ice. The box was placed always in a southeast angle of the house. As soon as the milder weather began, the vines grew with it till they were roaming over a space of about four to five feet as high as the supports and as long as the box (box was about six inches wide) and covered with perfect, beautiful flowers all spring till into the summer.

I kept the box watered night and morning and fertilized with liquid barnyard manure. The flowers (sweet peas) were blooming before my neighbors' were well started to grow.

The Market.

Business has been dragging its slow course onward as it usually does at this time of year. Now and then there is a little stir in the market, due to funeral work, but it is the exception. Stock is none too plentiful, either. Roses of any kind are scarce, Beauties, Brides, and Kaiserins being most in evidence and they sell quickly.

There are not many carnations. A very few good ones are to be had, also a few short-stemmed ones from the field. The demand is good, also the price and many more could be sold. Even asters are not equal to the demand, pink and purple being especially scarce. Short stemmed ones are most in evidence, but there are not nearly enough long ones to fill all orders. Gladioli form the only over-supply. There are hundreds of them and only the best quality sell with any degree of certainty. There is a plentiful supply of everything in the green goods line and a good demand.

The scarcity of water in this city, owing to the water works not being large enough to handle the amount of water that is required during such a dry spell as we are having at present, there not having been a soaking rain for mostly six weeks, is becoming a serious question to several of the florists who depend upon the city for their supply. It is to be hoped that the long looked for rain will come before any serious damage is done.

Various Notes.

The meeting of the S. A. F. O. H. is at hand and the pilgrimage toward St. Louis has been made by hundreds of the florists and their friends. Many of the eastern delegations stopped in this city between trains and were met by some of our boys. Those going from this city did not make the necessary arrangements to go in a body, but altogether, there will be a goodly number from this city.

J. T. Conger was the principal exhibitor in the flower and plant department at the Carthage fair last week. He made a very creditable showing and won the $75 prize for best display.

Wm. Murphy left Monday night for his annual trip to Snow Islands, seeking relief from his old trouble—hay fever.

H. D. Edwards is in Louisville for a few days. Before his return home he will visit the World's Fair.

E. G. Gillett and family left Monday for the S. A. F. O. H. convention, also a few days at the fair.

I regret to report the death of William Altemus Huntsman, father of Frank Huntsman, which occurred at Christ hospital, August 10. The deceased was eighty-two years old and died virtually of old age. He was at one time mayor of Reading, O., and in his early days was quite a politician. He was a schoolmate of the late Gov. Morton, of Indiana.

ROSES.

Seasonable Hints.

We are now approaching the time when owing to the cool, dewy nights it will be advisable, on many occasions, to use a little heat in order to check and minimize the conditions favorable to the growth of mildew and black spot.

Any check to root action which will interfere with the vitality of the plant is an invitation to these pests which, once they have secured a foothold, are certain to give us a deal of trouble and hard work to clear them out, and care should be taken to guard against such conditions.

With the warm days when copious supplies of water are necessary and the nights cool, there is sure to be considerable condensation which can be obviated in a great measure by the application of a little heat which will enable us to use ventilation, thereby securing a dry, pure atmosphere, which is absolutely essential to a good growth and healthy foliage.

A good deal of the success or failure of our rose crops depends on the care and attention given them during this period, as the transition from natural to artificial heat, in order to be successful, must be gradual.

Where the heating pipes are placed under the benches particular care must be taken to see that the roots near the bottom of the bench, and which are most liable to suffer from close proximity to the heat, do not suffer from want of water, as appearances are often deceptive, the surface of the bench frequently appearing moist while the body of the soil may be quite dry.

Those houses which were planted early and are now in a condition to bear a crop will be greatly benefited by the application of a light rich mulch. This serves the double purpose of feeding the plant and keeping the roots cool during warm weather, considerably increasing the size and quality of the bloom and providing a better quality of wood for a future crop.

In respect to taking a first crop from young stock, it is safer to be a little conservative in regard to quantity, as many errors are made yearly in this matter, fine, thrifty bushes being spoiled for months to come because of the ambition or greed of the grower to have a big cut. The grower who can see as far ahead as the holidays will content himself with one or two blooms from each plant for a first cut and conserve the vitality of the plant for wood making purposes, so that he may have some size and strength to his plants for the winter work.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Narcissi.

Paper white narcissi, Roman hyacinths, and other French bulbs are arriving, and if early bloom is desired there should be no delay in getting them into the flats. Remember that the Roman hyacinth, although withstanding some freezing without harm, if allowed to thaw out in a cool shed, will not endure anything like the hard freezing that is harmless to the Dutch hyacinths and tulips, and the paper whites want no frost at all. So, when you later box up your main lot for flowering at the holidays and on, the flats should be in such a position that when winter comes they can be protected with sash and shutters, besides the covering of soil or tanbark and four or five inches of stable litter.

People who go into the bulb business very largely may have a specially constructed root house or cellars. If so, they would, after winter set in, have to be kept near the freezing point. We have never found any place so good as out of doors for the flats.
